AMERICA IS WARNED ON STAND OF ITALY

Any Attempt to Disturb Axis Relations Doomed to Fail, Authorities State

Domei

ROME, January 16.—Any American attempts to disturb relations between Italy and Germany are doomed to fail at the start, authoritative quarters warned today in commenting on the return of Mr. William Phillips, American Ambassador to Rome, who has been reported as carrying a personal message from President Roosevelt to King Victor Emmanuel.

Axis harmony is evident, they said, in the recent arrival of German airmen in Italy to co-operate with the Italian air force, as well as in the participation of Italian airmen in several German raids on England.

According to unconfirmed rumors, Ambassador Phillips allegedly brought a personal message from President Roosevelt expressing the hope that the United States and Italy would not be fighting each other, even if a war between Germany and the United States develops.

Italian sources state, however, that the Ambassador's return has no special significance, as he merely is resuming his post after a routine leave of absence.

No significance is seen in the return of Mr. William Phillips, United States Ambassador to Rome following a brief visit to Washington, despite various interpretations that have been made concerning his return, the official Stefani News Agency says.

The Ambassador reportedly has denied carrying a personal message from President Roosevelt to King Victor Emmanuel, and has told American correspondents that he had no knowledge of such a message.

Officials here attribute the rumor of the message to British propaganda.

MECHANICS INCREASING

Defense Program Causes More to Enroll for Courses

I.N.S.

ST. LOUIS, January 5.—Unprecedented interest in mechanical skills which are needed in defense industries was manifest in the enlarge enrollment of adults this year in St. Louis public school evening classes, particularly in classes which bear some relations to war industries.

Night school enrollment during the first two weeks of this school year totaled 9,500, an increase of 790 over the enrollment for the same period last year, it is announced.

Included in the 9,500 figure are 528 students in refresher and mechanical training countries paid for by the Federal Government as part of the national preparedness program.

Classes in mechanical trades were selected by 2,200 of the 9,500 enrollees.

AMERICAN CORRIDOR PLAN TO ALASKA IS RECEIVED

Foreign Office Gets Report on New Defense Link Scheme For North America

An official report of the American plan to establish a corridor connecting Alaska, Canada and the United States reached the Foreign Office on Thursday, reports Domei.

According to press reports, the plan which is before the United States-Canada committee on joint defense will shortly be published. The original plan has been changed and by the new program a corridor will start from the central part of Canada, pass east of the Rockies and reach Alaska by way of British Columbia and the Yukon. When completed, many air bases for smaller warplanes and radio beacons will be established in the area.

Developments are being closely watched since there is talk in the United States of consolidating a battle line in the shape of a horseshoe connecting Alaska, Canada, United States, British and American insular territories in the Pacific, New Zealand, Australia, Hongkong and Singapore.

AUDIENCE PLEASED BY CHAMBER MUSIC

Professors Moguilewsky and Sirota Give First of Three Recitals at Hibiya Hall

By I. J. Fisher

Professor Alexandre Moguilewsky, violinist, and Professor Leo Sirota, pianist, gave the first of their three recitals last night before a large audience at the Hibiya Public Hall. In these three programs the artists will present the ten Sonatas for Violin and Piano by Beethoven.

Last evening's program consisted of the Opus 23 Sonata listed as the fourth in the cycle, and the Sonatas Nos. 1 and 2 of Opus 30 which chronologically are the sixth and seventh works of the cycle.

The first offering is a rather simple work and requires great skill to get the proper balancing of the tarantelles, the dance motives and the sprightly refrains, such as was given the sonata in the rendition. After the first movement the violin was warmed up and then the tene was pure and sang beautifully, and the two soloists were splendidly balanced and fused to perfection.

The No. 6 Sonata is distinctly pastoral in mood and as it was played last night the first and third movements were interesting and with much charm contradicting the commonly made criticism that these movements are "uninteresting to play and uninteresting to hear." In the first movement both artists succeeded in imparting to it a limpid charm and in the last movement, air and variations, there was wrought such a pleasing differentiation of light and shade and tonal variety as to make it altogether fascinating. The middle movement, Adagio molto expressivo, is magnificent and as rendered it was an ecstatic love song that mounted to the stars, and both instruments sang with superb legato tone. The violinist played this impassioned tune with deep feeling and also with great tenderness, while the piano part was exquisitely done, bring out out the full beauty of the music.

The third offering is a powerful work, heroic, bursting with exuberance. With its martial character it made a grand contrast to the pastoral feeling of the previous sonata. The four movements may be likened to successive scenes of a great military drama in which Beethoven has expressed in turn the joy of the conquerors and the lamentations of the conquered. The martial rhythms abound in the first three movements and the two performers were splendid in marking all with emphasis, precision, and a thoroughly sound musical interpretation. In the finale the depth of feeling and the joyousness imparted to this riot of festivity was superb and thrillingly played that the enthusiastic audience demanded that the last movement be repeated.

Both of these artists have been so well-schooled and prepared in the best European traditions and have had such a vast and varied experience in Europe that the blending of such ripe and mature musicianship is indeed a musical treat. Surely Tokyo music-lovers have a treat in store in the next two recitals to be given in February and March.

LONDON TIMES STRESSES TIES WITH EAST INDIES

Editorial Cites Mutual Dutch, English Interests, Denies Territorial Desires

Domei

LONDON, January 16.—The friendship between the British Empire and the Netherlands East Indies was stressed today by the London Times in an editorial commenting on the cordial relationships existing in the Far East between British and Netherlands colonial possessions.

"It has not needed the present war to persuade the British and the Dutch that their interests are almost entirely identical in the Far East," the Times said, adding that the "common danger" confronting both countries in western Europe has made "even closer than before the feeling of amity and mutual trust which exists between the communities of British Malaya and the Netherlands East Indies."

"The trustfulness of our Dutch friends," the paper said, "is a tribute to the value of good faith in international affairs, for if the slightest suspicion exists in the Dutch East Indies—and the Axis Powers have done their best to sow it—that Great Britain is seeking to acquire Dutch possessions, there would for them be little to choose between the British and Japanese Empires."

REFORMS IN BROADCASTS PLANNED BY CORPORATION

Programs to Be Brought Into Line With New Wartime National Structure

A series of fundamental reforms has been introduced in the activities of the Broadcasting Corporation of Japan in keeping with the new national structure, it was announced by the corporation yesterday.

Under the simplified structure of the organization, the business office is divided into seven sections, planning, publicity, lectures, culture, entertainment, music and international affairs.

Broadcast programs will be improved to meet the current international situation and the control of the programs will be strengthened. The reforms are expected to contribute to the promotion of unity within the nation, which is needed under the wartime conditions, says Domei.

Battledore and Shuttlecock Contest Held

The annual New Year battledore and shuttlecock contest took place yesterday under the auspices of the Tokyo municipality at the Hibiya Park amphitheater, with 70 contestants from 11 girls' high schools taking part.

American School News

The American School resumed classes again last week after a two-week Christmas and New Year vacation, with several new students, bringing the entire enrollment to about 90.

The Junior class received three new members: Kenneth Ishii, Rune Hardvendel and Hans Lotter. Kenneth Ishii and Rune Handvendel were formerly in the Yokohama International School. Hans Lotter and his sister Lotti Lotter, who is a special student, came from Lushan, in China.

Two new pupils, Mary Ishii and Conrad Roger, are enrolled in the Freshman class. Both were formerly in the International School. Conrad Roger is staying at the boys' dormitory on the school campus.

In the Junior High School, two boys recently entered the class: Brobie Hardvendel from the International School, and John Croft who had completed the work in the sixth grade and was transferred to the Junior high.

On Friday, a "pep" assembly was held to rehearse a few cheers for the Okura game, and the following game against the Y.C. and A.C. for the girls. Coach David E. Misner gave a short talk about the varsity team's progress and added a few words of encouragement for the coming tilts. A clever short skit was acted for the audience, and Jerry Downs gave a few words about his feelings as a varsity team member.

Bill Pearce, president of the Freshman class will leave for Shanghai this week, and Mario Villa Michel, Sophomore, will leave with his family for his home in Mexico. His two brothers, Primo, seventh grade, and Hector, sixth grade, also will leave with him.

Next Friday January 24, the boys varsity basketball team will play the Tokyo Y.M.C.A. team at the "Y" floor, at 7:30 p.m. The game will be recorded for broadcast to the United States, Canada, and the South Seas. All parents and friends of the school are invited to attend the match.

In a closely-contested tilt at the American School court, Friday afternoon, the Y.C.-A.C. girl's team eked out a victory against the Black and Orange girl hoopsters.

Starting out in the first quarter, Planas, visiting right forward made two baskets in a row before the home five was able to retaliate. Foote, home team captain, scored a short shot and was quickly followed by a swisher by Lord, Black and Orange guard. With the score tied, Brigell, Y.C.-A.C. high scorer, sunk a swisher, but was speedily followed by one, when Lord of the home quintet scored again. Just before the quarter whistle blew, Brigell sunk another long shot to put the girl's in the lead 6-8.

The second quarter was a nip and tuck battle of long shots between the two teams. Center Foote scored first, but Brigell registered another basket to lead her team. When Foote scored again, Brigell followed suit, keeping the Y.C.-A.C. in the lead by one basket. Prohaska, on a pass from Planas managed to sneak in a short shot for the visitors, but Foote retaliated with a swisher. Just before the half-time Brigell scored for the girls' quintet, and the score at the half was 16-14.

Rallying in the third quarter, the home five made five points before the Y.C.-Ladies could check the offensive. Brigell started on a scoring spree and sunk two long shots and a foul shot. With another basket by Planas, the score was 19-23 at the third quarter.

Foote, home team captain, started her team-mates off with a long swisher, and it was a fight to get possession of the ball. Planas managed to score against the home cagers, but Foote fighting hard scored another shot in a desperate attempt to even the score. Brigell scored again for the Y.C. and with a few seconds to go, Foote swished another basket, but the Y.C. carried away the victory.

The Okura hoopsters, never beaten by the Black and Orange team before, lost to the hard-fighting American quintet in a fast and furious game on the high school floor Friday afternoon.

Starting out in the first quarter, both teams were so evenly matched that the scoring was very low. Captain Tomino, high scorer for the visitors made the first basket quickly followed by speedy Downs, highscorer for the Black and Orange. Following his teammate's example Bruce Brown made the only other basket for the high school squad, and Okura retaliated with a swisher evening the score, until the visitors made a foul shot, giving them the lead when the quarter whistle blew.

The Black and Orange cagers really went to town in the second quarter. The Okura five managed to make only one basket during the entire quarter, while the fast-working home five outplayed the visitors and scored 11 points, making the score 15-7 at the half.

Rallying his team-mates in the third quarter, the Okura captain swished in a long shot, but they could not stem the scoring spree started by Downs who made two baskets in a row followed by four more by his team-mates.

All the Black and Orange substitutes saw action in the last quarter and kept the Okura scoring down to three baskets in a last minute rally to even the score. The final gun went off with a victory in the bag for the Black and Orange five: 34-16.

DISAGREEMENT REPORTED ON NEW U.S. NAVY BASE

British Authorities Said Trying To Give America Swamp Land at Trinidad

United Press

WASHINGTON, January 5.—British authorities at Trinidad, it is reliably learned, have vainly tried to convince the United States that it should choose a section of swampy land as one of its defense sites which Britain has promised to turn over in return for 50 destroyers.

U.S., official say, is insisting upon a site northwest of Port of Spain, which offers a good anchorage alongside high ground on which defensive guns might be placed. To the local island authorities' suggestion that the swampy area be reclaimed, the American officials objected that the cost of such an operation would be prohibitive.

Certain other obstacles also have to be ironed out, it is said, before actual construction can begin on some of the string of Western Hemisphere bases being acquired from Britain. However, Secretary of State Cordell Hull said today that the negotiations are going along normally, and other sources expressed confidence that agreements satisfactory to both the United States and Great Britain would be reached.

(The United States transferred 50 destroyers, approximately 20 years old, to Britain. In turn, Britain agreed to give the United States 99-year leases on naval and air base sites, the American Government to pay for any private property expropriated in the process.)

If present negotiators should not be able to reach an agreement on the Trinidad site, the question would go eventually to Mr. Hull and Lord Halifax, the British Foreign Minister, for final settlement.

Location of the bases at Bermuda and St. Lucia also has not been settled definitely, reliable sources said, but only about 10 per cent of the problems there remained at issue.

TWO-MILE RECORD SMASHED BY RICE

Former Notre Dame Runner Covers Distance Well Under Nine Minutes

Domei
NEW YORK, February 15.—Greg Rice, former Notre Dame distance runner competing under the colors of the South Bend (Indiana) Athletic Association, tonight bettered the world's two-mile record when he covered the distance in 8:53.4 during the New York Athletic Club Track Meet at Madison Square Garden.

More than 15,000 spectators cheered the little alumnus, who broke the 3½-year-old record of 8:56 held by Miklos Szabo, of Hungary, as well as the 8:56.2 indoor mark which Rice established during his indoor campaign last year.

In the mile run, Leslie MacMitchell, New York University's national intercollegiate champion, breasted the tape ahead of Walter Mehl, former Wisconsin ace, equalling the world's indoor mark of 4: 7.4.

Considered America's greatest all-time distance runner, Greg Rice was awarded the James E. Sullivan Memorial Trophy last month as the outstanding amateur athlete of 1940.

He won the National A.A.U. outdoor 5,000-meter championship three years in success on besides being the present indoor three-mile titleholder. He astounded the world last winter by creating new world records in the two-mile (8:56 2) and three-mile (13:56). His track victories over Taisto Maki, of Finland, who came to America acclaimed as the world's greatest distance runner, were decisive.

Yuki Reports Rise In '40 Money Deals

the Government in tax revenue and postal savings, and with the demand for productivity expansion funds considerably increased, the money market presented a slightly tight condition on the whole. Due to the timely release of funds by the Treasury Deposit Bureau and the increased disbursement of Government funds from September onwards, together with various operations conducted by this Bank, money conditions remained quiet, notwithstanding the heavy demands toward the end of the year, the day-in-day rate not rising over 2.74 per cent per annum. Meanwhile, the negotiations for the issues of corporation bonds and local government loans have been concluded to the amount of ¥2,500,000,000 during the year, an increase of ¥450,000,000 over the previous year, and naturally the digestion of these bonds tended to be rather sluggish. The share market has on the whole also continued to be dull since April, reflecting the complicated and uncertain outlook, both at home and abroad.

"The national savings have continued to increase, and the goal of ¥12,000,000,000 set for the current year is expected to be attained. However, in order to introduce a definite planning system in the employment of funds, the Government in August ordered the leading banks to submit reports concerning their estimates about deposits and advances, and promulgated the Ordinance Regulating the Employment of Funds by Banks and Other Institutions, and at the same time strengthened the Capital Adjustment Law. A remarkable progress has thus been made in regard to financial control. There was also an increasing tendency of mergers as well as joint financings among banks. Under the circumstances, the National Finance Council was formed in September, comprising various monetary institutions throughout the country with this Bank as its leading member, to fulfil their missions in closer harmony and collaboration—an organization whereby to co-operate with the national policy in reponse to the new structure movements in various circles.

"The amount of Government loans issued the past year, excluding Rice Notes and Silk Notes totaled ¥6,754,000,000. Of these issues, ¥4,817,000,000 was taken by this Bank and ¥1,850,000,000 by the Treasury Deposit Bureau, the remainder representing the bonds delivered for various purposes. The net amount of the sales of Government bonds by this Bank out of its holdings during the year reached ¥3,390,000,000, including ¥570,000,000 sold through the post offices.

Bank's Activity Traced

"To review the Bank's business, our loans and discounts have shown a considerable increase in the latter half-year, reflecting the conditions of the money market as above mentioned, and the amount outstanding in the average for the year was ¥665,000,000, which was an increase of ¥191,000,000 as compared with the previous year. The amount outstanding on December 31 was ¥818,000,000, which was a decline of ¥245,000,000 as compared with the previous year. Of this, ¥289,000,000 represented the discounts made under the Indemnity Act of 1927, the total amount repaid on the said discounts during the past year being ¥42,000,000. Of the deposits with this Bank, Government current account amounted in the average for the year to ¥212,000,000, being higher than in the previous year by ¥13,000,000. The private deposits totaled at ¥160,000,000 in the average for the year, a decrease of ¥3,000,000 as compared with the previous year. The Bank's holdings of Government loans, including Rice Notes and Silk Notes, amounted to ¥2,658,000,000 in the average for the year and to ¥3,942,000,000 outstanding on December 31, showing in comparison with the previous year increases of ¥937,000,000 and ¥1,531,000,000 respectively. The Bank-note issue, as compared with the previous year, increased by ¥930,000,000 in the average for the year and amounted to ¥3,336,000,000 and the highest amount for the year was ¥4,930,000,000, or an increase of ¥1,112,000,000 on the corresponding figure in 1939. It may be added that the Bank-notes used for reserves against the note issues of the Bank of Chosen and the Bank of Taiwan averaged for the year at ¥104,000,000, an increase of ¥70,000,000 as compared with the previous year.

Foreign Developments

"A glance over developments abroad. In Europe, with Germany's splendid military achievements and expanded political influence resulting from successful drives in Northern Europe and the Low Countries, followed by Italy's entry into the war and France's capitulation, the construction of Germany's scheme of European "Grossraumwirtschaft" has made a good advance. While Great Britain has made efforts to tighten its wartime structure and to increase its fighting strength against Germany under the Emergency Powers Defence Act, it has come to depend more upon the United States for material and capital supplies, being affected by German air raids over munition industry centers and the consequent slowing-down of production. In the United States, since President Roosevelt has been elected to a third term, its assistance to Great Britain and the Chungking regime has become more positive. With the passage of huge budgets, the armament expansion program has been pushed forward, and there has been in evidence an increase of economic activities.

"In East Asia, there has been witnessed the re-establishment of the National Government of the Republic of China under the Presidency of Mr. Wang Ching-wei, and with which Japan concluded in November a fundamental treaty concerning relations between the two nations, thus marking a new era in settling the China Affair and adjusting the relations between the two nations. In the meantime, the economic reconstruction and development of national resources have made considerable progress throughout both Central and North China. With the operations on the spot becoming gradually effective, the exchange rate of the Military Notes against the Fapi (the Chungking regime's currency) has registered a notable advance, while the solution of the Tientsin British and French Concessions question, and the more intensive development of resources in China have all helped to strengthen the position of the Federal Reserve Bank of China Notes. Again, at the end of the year, the establishment of Central Reserve Bank of China was finally decided. Thus, Japan's operations in China have made a remarkable advance in the fields of industry, currency and finance. In Manchoukuo, in line with the new development of the international situation the industrial development has been pushed forward along more important lines, and various control measures have also been intensified. Closer relationship and collaboration between this Bank and the Central Bank of Manchou have been established, by virtue of which the exchange of materials between the two countries has been further accelerated. In addition, the extension of German-Manchoukuo trade agreements and Rumania's recognition of Manchoukuo have further strengthened international position. Under these circumstances, mutual co-operation among Japan, Manchoukuo and China has been greatly enhanced. Furthermore, with the signing of the Japan-Thailand Amity and Friendship Treaty, the progress of economic negotiations between Japan and French Indo-China, and the conclusion of the banking agreement between the Yokohama Specie Bank and the Javache Bank, the task of establishing a sphere of common prosperity in Greater East Asia is steadily progressing.

National Policy Stressed

"During the year under review, meeting with the rapid development of the international situation, utmost efforts have been exerted for strengthening wartime economic structure, as a result of which some repercussions have been felt in some quarters, especially in those of small and medium-sized merchants and producers. However, thanks to the appropriate measures taken by the Government and the concerted efforts of the people, our economic activities have been carried on with comparative smoothness, and the real strength of our national economy has been further demonstrated. Many difficulties have to be encountered within the way of rapidly constructing a State highly organized for national defense in coping with the delicate and complicated international situation. It is therefore important for the people understand the national policy and render their services for the attainment of the national objective in their respective fields of activity. In the monetary field, untiring efforts should be continually made for the accumulation of capital; for the employment of capital according to a better planning; for the digestion of Government bonds; and also for the supply of productivity expansion funds along more important lines, and thus to make contributions for the stabilization of national living and for the perfection of the Greater East Asia Economic Area of Self-sufficiency. This Bank, in close co-operation with the Government and the people, is determined to do its utmost in unholding the confidence in our currency and in facilitating the smooth operation of wartime finance."

AUSTRALIAN LABORITE URGES PREPAREDNESS

Curtin Warns Commonwealth Must Not Become Another Norway or Poland

Domei
MELBOURNE, February 17.—Warning that Australia must not be allowed to become "another Norway or Poland," Mr. John Curtin, head of the Labor party, today strongly urged the Australian people to leave no stone unturned in defense, asserting that "being armed" is the only safeguard against a possible invasion.

"Though none are able to penetrate the intentions of the enemy, it is imperative for Australians," he said. "To be ready and being ready can only mean being armed.

"Only foolish people will allow Australia to become another Norway or Poland."

As a further move to bolster Australian defense, the Laborite stated it was likely and logical that military training for men now in camps should be extended to 90 days or more.

Commenting on the emergency meeting of the War Cabinet, Mr. Curtin said Cabinet Ministers and members of the War Council probably would spend the three days of next weekend discussing the situation in the Pacific and reviewing defense plans.

He added the belief that extension of greater powers to the Minister for Defense and his advisers would be the outcome of the meeting of the War Cabinet.

STAGE PLEDGES AID TO NEW STRUCTURE

Assistance to Imperial Rule Promised by Producers, Playwrights and Designers

Leading Japanese producers, playwrights, and stage designers pledged assistance to the Imperial Rule under the new structure yesterday afternoon at the inaugural meeting of the Nihon Engeki Kyokai, Japanese Dramatic Association, which was held at the New National Theater, formerly known as the Tsukiji Little Theater. Mr. Mantaro Kubota, noted playwright, was elected president of the association by unanimous acclaim.

A ceremony marked the inauguration, beginning with the offering of respects to the Imperial Palace and a silent prayer for the war heroes. The regular meeting was opened by Mr. Kyuri Kikuoka who invited those present to proceed to the election of the president. Then a report on the events leading up to the foundation of the association was given by Mr. Tamotsu Takada, playwright and stage producer.

According to Mr. Takada's report, the idea of founding an association of playwrights, producers, designers, and other statistic co-operators of the theater was first discussed between Mr. Mantaro Kubota and himself last August "while sipping ice-cream at the Ueno Seiyoken." No suggestion to that effect had been made by the authorities, and the association was born solely from the free will of the stage artists who were desirous of co-ordinating their efforts for the assistance of the State, the speaker pointed out.

Up to yesterday, 355 positive replies had been received by the provisional committee of the association to a circular soliciting membership, Mr. Takada reported, adding that the total membership for Tokyo alone was expected to reach about 500 by the end of this month. The comparatively small attendance at the inaugural meeting, at which less than two hundred members were present, was explained by the fact that many of the members were engaged in work in the theaters of the Asakusa district at the hour of the meeting.

The spirit of the new association was significantly demonstrated by the large number of new national uniforms seen at the meeting. At the same time, the fact that the former Tsukiji Little Theater, the traditional birth-place of the modern Japanese theatrical movement, had been selected as the site of the inaugural ceremony, was noteworthy.

Following Mr. Takada's report the meeting proceeded to the election of various committees under Mr. Kubota's presidency. Some disorder prevailed during the election as for some time no accord could be reached regarding the proper method of election.

The association is divided into three departments, one each for playwrights, producers, and stage artists. The two departments for playwrights and producers each are subdivided into two sections, of which Section 1 will compose free-lancers, and Section 2 those who are working under definite contracts with a theatrical company. The department for stage artists will include designers in its first section, and those carrying out the designs in its second section. Each section will have a committee, and each of the three departments will have an extra committee. The three extra committees will form the association's council. In addition, an executive committee of five and two administrators were elected. The registration of the association as a public foundation with the status of a juridical person is under preparation.

BELGRADE, February 17.—Heavy fighting in the sector extending from Klisure to the seacoast in Albania was in progress today, according to reports from the Albanian warfront.

The Greek forces claimed they had succeeded in advancing to the west of Klisura and Tepeleni, where the Italians have carried out a strategic retreat. However, in all other sectors, the Italian forces were said to have offered determined resistance and apparently have inflicted heavy losses on the Greeks.

Reports received here further claimed that the Greek troops have not been able to improve their positions in the southern sector around Valona, where fighting was said to be exceptionally fierce to the north of the seaport of Chimara.

Solution Penetrates Defective Gas Masks As British Stage Test

I.N.S.

LONDON, February 17.—Britain's first gas alarm test, presumably in anticipation of possible Nazi invasion tactics, was staged today at Brighton. Officers released a mild solution of tear gas and the public was compelled to don gas masks. Several persons had to be treated at first aid stations in the test. They were wearing, it was discovered, imperfect masks.

BOKU JABS WAY TO WIN ON POINTS FROM KAIDO

Korean Piles Up Early Lead in Feature Bout on Hibiya Hall Card

Ryushin Boku, ace fighter of the Nippon Boxing Club jabbed his way to a decision over Takeshi Kaido, last night in the ten-round main event of a boxing program held at the Hibiya Public Hall. It was a close fight all the way, with Kaido willingly exchanging punches with the Korean and extending the recent winner over Piston Horiguchi, to fire away with everything.

After three rounds of routine, "feeling out," Boku found the range with his fast jabs, scoring continually to pile up an early lead. However, with each passing round, Kaido broke through Boku's defense and in the seventh landed with a couple hard rights that slowed Boku considerably.

In the last two rounds, the Korean took the offensive in spurts, and scored with hard smashes and jabs. Each blow found its mark on Kaido's face and at the end of the fight, Kaido's eyes were nearly shut from the pounding.

Both fighters weighed in at 138 pounds.

Fukuda, a superb workman with hard lefts and short uppercuts, cut Nakamura to ribbons to take the unanimous decision of the judges in another ten-rounder. Taking the offensive from start to end, Fukuda landed blows at will to badly beat Nakamura. Sometimes Fukuda drove five and six blows to Nakamura's face without a return.

To Nakamura's credit, was his fighting spirit. Although badly marked up and clearly taking a beating, he refused to go down and held on for the full ten-rounds to win the plaudits of the capacity house.

In the six-rounders, Sawada took the decision over Shindo while Ohba and Noguchi fought to a draw.

JOE LOUIS FLOORS FOE IN 2ND ROUND

Heavyweight Champion Makes Short Work of Challenger Gus Dorazio

Domei

PHILADELPHIA, February 17.—Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis tonight made short work of Gus Dorazio when he floored the local challenger for the count with a short right to the chin midway in the second of a scheduled 15-round title bout.

Although Dorazio kept Louis from delivering any damage in the opening round by fighting in a crouching position, the Brown Bomber in the second round wasted little time in finding openings for his lethal punches. The knockout was Louis' 14th victory.

The fighters weighed in as follows: Louis 203 pounds, Dorazio 193.

GERMAN SKI JUMP TITLE TAKEN BY FORMER CHAMP

Josef Bradl Wins First Place Over Finn With 275-Foot Leap

Domei

GARMISCH PARTENKIRSCHEN, February 16.—Josef Bradl, of Germany, winner of the international ski jumping title in 1939, today annexed the German title at the fifth winter sports championships.

With jumps of 275 feet 7 inches, and 259 feet, Bradl defeated Timo Murama, of Finland, who registered distances of 272 feet 3 inches, and 249 feet 4 inches. Josef Weiler, of Germany, was third with distances of 265 feet 9 inches, and 238 feet 6 inches.

Paavo Vierto, Finnish skier who won the jumping competition at Cortina d'Ampezzo recently, dropped out of the competition after taking a bad spill in his first leap.

ICE HOCKEY IS RETURNING WITH SHIBAURA CONTEST

Intercollegiate Games to Feature Clash Between Meiji And St. Paul's

Intercollegiate ice hockey will return to the Shibaura rink for the final major game of the season tomorrow night, with the Meiji University puckmen, national and intercollegiate champions, clashing with the St. Paul's University team at 6:30 o'clock.

While no title is at take, a slam-bang game will in all probability be seen tomorrow night. The last time there two rivals faced-off, the national intercollegiate crown hinged on the result. After a thrill-packed game the Meiji six overcame an early lead by St. Paul's to emerge on top, 7 to 3.

From past performances, the Meiji team will be the favorites. They will once again be under the able leadership of their star players, T. Eizoie, Watase and Nakamura. The former two should especially cause the St. Paul's outfit a lot of trouble.

Possessing better scoring ability and team co-ordination the Meijities hold a superior margin over the St. Paul's representation. However, should the intercollegiate runner-ups pile up an early lead against Meiji as they did in their last meeting, the concensus is that the champions will have a tough time from going under, for what will prove a surprising upset.

The St. Paul's team is handicapped by having no good reserves, therefore, they will rely mainly on their star players, Takahashi, and Onikura for their scoring. The game should attract another capacity crowd, and as a farewell game of the season, it promises to be a most attractive affair.

The probable line-ups are:

Meiji		St. Paul's
T. Eizoie	Wing	Ohmura
Naito	Wing	Takahashi
Nakamura	Center	Onikura
Yamanouchi	Defense	Nakamura
Namekawa	Defense	Naito
Nakagawa	Goal	Miyake
Tamura	Spare	Goto
Uchifuji	Spare	Taga
S. Eizoie	Spare	Yamato
Watase	Spare

WANT AMERICAN BURIAL

Elderly Japanese Couple Going Abroad Again Soon

Mr. Matsunosuke Tsukamoto, 84, the oldest attendant at the Congress of Japanese Residents Abroad he'd last fall in Tokyo in connection with the 2,600th anniversary of the Empire foundation, will leave shortly for his home in North America with his 66-year-old wife, says the Nichi Nichi.

The old couple visited Japan after an absence of 45 years. Though his relatives urged them to spend their remaining years in Japan in view of the tense international situation and their advanced ages, they wish to be buried in American soil.

"Now that we have witnessed our native country's great progress, we have nothing to regret in leaving for our home," they said to the Nichi Nichi.

Mr. and Mrs. Tsukamoto are expected to leave Yokohama aboard the N.Y.K. liner Asama Maru. Mr. Tsukamoto is a native of Chiba prefecture.

AZORES ISLES VITAL IN NAVAL STRATEGY

Importance Stressed by President Roosevelt in Recent Speech

In his recent radio address to the United States nation, President Roosevelt made pointed reference to the Azores Islands, emphasizing that the cluster of Portuguese islands lies closer to the Atlantic shores of the United States than is the island fortress of Hawaii to the coast of California.

"Thus the President, who inspected United States warships based in the Azores during the World War when he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, drew attention to the importance of the group in the strategy of American defense in the Atlantic," says a bulletin from the National Geographic Society.

"The Azores lie at about the eastern limit of possible naval operations of the United States fleet from its existing bases on the eastern seaboard of North America. New York is 2,098 nautical miles to the west. From Bermuda and Newfoundland, where new United States bases are being constructed, the islands are distant only 1,800 and 1,200 miles, respectively.

"Of the nine scattered islands, lying at an average distance of about 900 miles west of Lisbon, Portugal, the best known is Fayal. Horta, its chief city, is a busy center of transoceanic communications. The port is a stopping place for the regular flying boat service from the United States to Portugal.

"Horta is the most important junction point of transatlantic cables. In one of its buildings six companies—British, German, Italian, French, and two American—are housed. Through 15 direct cables, they handle messages for stations in North America, Europe, and South Africa, and by interconnection for stations in every part of the world. Horta is also a convenient fueling station for ocean shipping, and the city has a powerful naval radio station.

"Although Horta has the edge in fame, two other Azores cities surpass it in size—Ponta Delgada, on the island of Sao Miguel, and Angra, on Terceira. Other islands in the 375-mile-long archipelago are Corvo, Flores, Graciosa, Sao Jorge, Pico, and Santa Maria. The total population is about 255,000, mostly of Portuguese origin.

"Like most regions of volcanic origin, the Azores are scenically spectacular, with rugged, pointed peaks rising above verdant, intensively cultivated lowlands which support luxuriant vineyards and orchards. Farmers raise herds of cattle, and the rich fields, with a wonderfully mild climate, produce fruit, corn, wheat, potatoes, tobacco, jute, tea, and pineapples.

"Ocean winds, strong from south and west, turn the canvas sails of windmills which grind grain into meal and flour. Although the use of trucks is becoming more widespread, many countrymen still haul their produce in 'singing carts' which get their name from the squeaky sound of two wooden wheels revolving on axles also of wood. There are valuable fisheries of tuna, bonito, and mullet, and whaling is a profitable industry.

"Politically an integral part of the Republic of Portugal, the Azores are sometimes officially listed as 'islands adjacent' to the European homeland. In Portuguese the name is Acores, which signifies 'hawks.'

"Ancient coins found on the Azores indicate that the islands were probably first visited by Carthaginians. Portuguese navigators rediscovered them in 1432 and claimed them for Portugal. On the island of Santa Maria, Columbus stopped in 1493 with the news of his discoveries in the West.

"Transatlantic flights brought the Azores into the news as early as 1919, when the U.S. navy seaplane NC-4 landed at Horta after a flight from Newfoundland, and then took off on the last leg of the first successful transatlantic flight. Horta citizens greeted Colonel and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh in November, 1933, when they stopped off on their flight around the North Atlantic. British, German, and French transocean planes have also used Fayal as a stepping stone on flights across the Atlantic."

The soloists were Mr. Tamotsu Kinoshita, tenor, in the role of Don Jose; Mrs. Fumiko Yotsuya, mezzo-soprano, Carmen; Escamillo, Mr. Takeo Ito, baritone; Miss Kayako Izaki, soprano, as Micaela; Miss Mieko Kako, soprano, Frasquita; Miss Mitsue Takemoto, mezzo-soprano, Mercedes; Mr. Mutsumi Shibata, tenor, Rememdado; Mr. Masazumi Narumi, baritone, Dancairo; Mr. Keiro Kin, bass, Zuniga; Mr. Ryohei Miyamoto, bass, as Morales.

The Vocal Four Mixed Chorus, of 18 male voices and 28 women's voices, sang the choruses. The orchestra rendered the opening overture, the prelude and intermezzo preceding the second act, and the intermezzos before the third and fourth acts.

A virile and quite spirited performance marked the opening overture, and the brasses were in good form and heard to advantage under the tremolo strings in the andante section after the opening march. Deserving of special mention was the excellent rendition of the pastoral intermezzo introducing the third act. The flute solo was lovely, the pizzicato accompaniment very precise and rhythmic, and the number imbued with atmosphere. The accompanying of the various soloists, the combinations and the chorus was splendid. The conductor managed everything so well that not a slip or missed cue was discovered.

Of all the soloists, Carmen was vocally outstanding, singing with assurance, ease and a confidence born of good training and long experience. Micaela, next in prominence, has a good voice of pleasing quality, but due to nervousness, no doubt because of a lack of experience, was inclined to tighten the throat and pinch the high tones resulting occasionally in faulty pitch. Frasquita and Mercedes in their smaller parts pleased when they could be heard, and did very well in the Gypsy Song with Carmen.

Of the male soloists, the difficult role of Don Jose was taken by Mr. Kinoshita substituting for Mr. Genjiro Nagata, who had been previously programmed for the part. Tenor Kinoshita was not vocally pleasing much of the time, but did redeem himself in his good singing of the lovely romance, Air de la Fleur. Evidently he had saved his voice for this number. After this there was an unmusical harshness nearly always in evidence.

The baritone voice of Escamillo was inadequate on the extreme ends of range in the Toreador Song, but when within range his voice, as always, is musically pleasing and always well-used. Zuniga, sung by Mr. Kin, makes demands in the declamatory style and the singer was too often guilty of resorting to a falsetto for effect. He has a good voice and does not need to do this. The other male soloists were pleasing, with voices limited in range and volume.

These points did not by any means spoil the combined effect of the performance. It was a thoroughly pleasing effort, very unusual for Japan, and worthy of high praise. The results were indeed artistic and often quite stirring. One hopes very much that Conductor Rosenstock will decided to give concert performances of other operas.

The Vocal Four Chorus was excellent and sang in such style as to be accorded much praise for the successful evening. The men in evening dress, and the women all gowned alike in pale blue evening dresses with black sashes made a pretty picture in two rows back-stage behind the orchestra. The chorus singing was marked by perfect precision and showed the results of fine training in the well-wrought crescendos, unity in attacks and releases. The response to every cue from the conductor was admirable.

committee are hoped for. The three countries are to co-operate in all directions. At present, mutual accommodation of materials is still to be arranged, and transportation, too, is not sufficient. For the time being pending further development of the European situation, exchanges of invention and technique will be concentrated on. This Mr. Matsuoka explained bluntly.

With realization of this exchange, a domestic system that makes this possible must be perfected, and Germany and Italy, too, must do likewise. This is a serious need especially in this country, because Japan lags behind in controled economy. Apart from the alliance, however this question has been given special importance by Japan since last year, and the present may said to be not a time for discussion, but for action.

Since the United States embargo on the export of scrap iron, Japanese iron manufacturers have intensified co-operation to save its consumption. The sharing of technique therefore must be realized through a proper organization, and it is hoped it will be realized on the basis of utilization.

KANSAI GAKUIN FORMS U.S.-STYLE GRID TEAM

Football Players Celebrate Squad's Organization, Elect Kunio Idoko Captain

The Kansai Gakuin University of Kobe will, for the first time, be representated with an American football team this season. An inauguration dinner, celebrating the formation of the team, was held last night in the Takarazuka Hotel, Takarazuka.

Professor Kenjin Matsuzawa of the university assumed the presidency of the organization, while 25 members of the team elected Kunio Idoko, captain and Kazuo Kawai, manager. The team will be coached by Jun Hanaoka, graduate of Meiji University.

At the dinner, Professor Matsuzawa expressed his gratitude to Mr. Paul Rusch, former president of the Tokyo Intercollegiate League, whose efforts aided greatly in the formation of the team.

Kansai Gakuin is the third school in the Kansai district with a football team. The others are, Kandai and Doshisha of Kyoto.

Ambitious Russell Given Recognition

ing feminine role opposite Bert Lytell in The Second Man. Hollywood didn't wait long to claim the actress.

She wasn't certain she would like the cinema city. For that reason she left most of her belongings in her native city of Waterbury, vowing not to buy anything she couldn't take with her on a train bound East if the movies didn't suit her, or if she didn't satisfy the movies.

Her first role was in Evelyn Prentice, which co-starred William Powell and Myrna Loy. In the next six month, she appeared in seven pictures and lost 18 pounds.

Miss Russell's own story about how she became an actress is based on an independent strain that runs in her blood.

"When I finished college," she explained, "I was fired with a desire to become quickly self-supporting. What could I do to earn money? I could teach school, but would it bring me more than forty dollars a week? That wasn't enough for Rosalind. Actresses make money. So I became an actress.

"The hard truth is that I became an actress to earn money, a lot of money. I gave myself five years in which to succeed. If at the end of that time I had failed as an actress I would seek my fortune in some other line."

She began by hounding booking offices in New York. They could not get rid of her. She listened with open ears and learned a lot. Finally a chance arrived to go with a tent show in the Adirondacks in 1929. She played with that show 26 weeks.

The rest of her story is that of any actress who learns the hard way.

Police Reportedly Arrest Former Socialist Party President

Domei

VICHY, February 14. — German police have arrested Mr. Rudolf Breitscheid, former president of the German Socialist Party, according to reports here today.

Mr. Breitscheid also was a member of the Reichstag, before the Nazi ascent to power, and was a German delegate to the League of Nations.

Dr. Rudolf Hilferding, Minister of Finance in the Cabinet of Mr. Herman Mueller in 1923, was arrested with Mr. Breitscheid, reports say. Both had been living in exile in Paris since Chancellor Adolf Hitler's advent to power.

The men are said to have been taken back to Germany. Mrs. Breitscheid, who is now in Vichy, says she has not been able to trace their travels after they were taken in custody by Germans at Moulins, on the boundary between occupied and unoccupied France.

DIET MEMBERS PASS BANK, PEACE BILLS

Ten Measures Receive Approval Of Representatives in 3-Hour Session

7 FINANCE LAWS VOTED

Criminal Code Revision, Criticized for Severe Punitive Clauses, Is Tabled

In a session lasting three Hours the House of Representatives yesterday afternoon adopted 10 bills, including the peace law revision bill and the bill for control of the silk-raising industry, and referred two bills, including the criminal revision bill, to committee.

The bill for revision of the criminal law was tabled. A short address by Justice Minister Heisuke Yanagawa explained the reasons for the introduction of the measure by the Government.

In the discussion that followed, Mr. Ichiro Shoji feared that some of the legislative bills introduced at the current session were much more severe than necessary in their punitive clauses. He demanded to know whether the Government is willing to consider a proposal for the liberation of convicts who have rendered services to the state.

Confident of Understanding

Replying, Justice Minister Yanagawa admitted that the Government had sought to strengthen the punitive clauses of some existing laws. He expressed confidence that a better understanding of these laws on the part of the public would counteract the effect of the strengthening of their punitive clauses. He pledged himself to try his utmost to increase the knowledge of the public regarding the laws of the land.

Mr. Seiki Satake demanded a more sweeping revision of the criminal law than is provided by the bill, and elicited the reply from the Justice Minister that his Ministry which is realizing the need of effecting drastic reforms in the law would try to obtain a complete plan for revision of the law as soon as possible.

The measure was referred to a committee.

Then the peace law revision bill which was the subject of a heated debate in the committee studying the measure was brought up for consideration. There was no debate, and the bill was adopted by the House as reported by the chairman of the committee.

Order Changed

Here the order of the day was changed and eight bills were brought up in a group. They were the savings union bill, the national rehabilitation bank bill, a bill for revision of the regulations governing the Japan Hypothec Bank, a bill for revision of the regulations governing the Hokkaido Development Company, one for revision of the regulations governing the Agricultural and Industrial bank, one concerning the adjustment of Government commissions, a bill for revision of the law governing postal savings, and the shipping protection bill.

These measures were adopted without amendment as reported from the chairman of the committee which had studied them.

The order of the day was changed once again to permit action by the House on the bill for control of the silk-raising industry which had been adopted by the committee dealing with it earlier in the day.

A bill sponsored by a group of members of the House, concerning qualifications of probationary judges and barristers, came up for discussion. The measure was referred to a committee.

Premier Still Ill

With Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye confined to his house by illness a few days longer, the chairman of the Budget Committee, Mr. Giichi Masuda, informed the committee yesterday morning, that in the Premier's absence questions addressed to him would be answered by the Home Minister, reports Domei.

Agricultural and financial matters occupied the committee as it began its session at 10:37 a.m.

Replying to Mr. Teitaro Ohmoto's question whether the Government did not think it advisable, from the standpoint of national defense to separate naval arsenals from naval ports, Navy Minister Koshiro Oikawa stated that all new arsenals are being decentralized.

Mr. Naoki Hoshino, president of the Cabinet Planning Board, in reply to Mr. Yoshihei Fukazawa, said that the Government was attaching more importance to the supply of agricultural labor than to that of industrial labor, adding that any shortage of labor will be supplied from Korea.

Manchoukuo Project Up

Mr. Hoshino also went on to say that the Government is now planning to develop 20,000,000 hectares of farm land in Manchoukuo as the first step in increasing the supply of foodstuffs. With regard to the Government's population policy, he said that the Government plans to maintain 40 per cent of the population for agriculture.

Agriculture and Forestry Minister Tadaatsu Ishiguro, replying to Mr. Ohmoto, assured him that the Government intends to enforce the regulations regarding food consumption in such as way as to avoid to the utmost inconveniencing the people.

At the afternoon session, Mr. Nagahiro Nagano asked what was the policy of the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry for the distribution of fertilizer. Mr. Ishiguro replied that, in allocating fertilizer, priority will be given to the claims of farmers engaged in the production of rice and wheat.

The same questioner, raising the matter of the increasing difficulties of the tenant farmers, was told by the Agriculture Minister that he is working at the details of a policy for relieving the tenant farmers who number nearly 200,000 throughout the country. Some hint of what the Minister was contemplating was given when he intimated that increased efforts would be made by his Ministry in mediating disputes involving tenant farmers. He also spoke of the establishment of a system of landed farmers.

Would Limit Commissions

Turning to the question of control companies, the interpellator urged that the commissions of the proposed timber control company should not exceed 8 per cent, to which the Minister replied that the question of the rate of commissions would be settled in such a way as to do justice to the company.

Mr. Ishiguro also stated, in reply to another question regarding commissions, that it was his wish to create conditions favorable to a reduction of the commissions not only of the timber control companies but also other control companies under the jurisdiction of his Ministry, including the Toa timber trading company.

The interpellator went on to suggest, in regard to the control of paper mills, that it might be well for the Government to distinguish between mills making Japanese style paper and those making foreign style paper, in carrying out the policy of unifying paper mills.

In reply, Mr. Shigeru Kajiwara, director of the Fiber Bureau of the Commerce and Industry Ministry, stated that his Ministry is weighing the question of whether it might be better to unify all paper manufacturing companies or separate them according to Japanese or foreign style paper.

Mr. Kenzo Aoyama, the next interpellator, raised the question of the delivery of materials needed by fishery interests.

Study Fishing Problem

The Agriculture Minister said that this question was receiving his earnest attention, adding that his Ministry is giving particular attention to the development of fisheries in home waters which do not require any large amount of materials.

The same interpellator criticized official fish prices, and said that their inappropriateness was responsible for many of the difficulties of the consuming public. He urged the Government to pay greater attention to the distribution of fish. Mr. Ishiguro replied that he would make inquiries and would adjust the prices if it seemed necessary.

The next interpellator, Mr. Yadanji Nakajima, dealing with the 1941-2 budget, pointed out that there is a total appropriation of ¥3,300,000,000 in the general and special accounts to meet the cost of contracts outside the budget, and desired information on the policy which was followed in fixing the appropriation.

Included in List

The Finance Minister, Mr. Isao Kawada, replied that sums to be paid by the Government to compensate losses suffered by private interests in transactions carried out in pursuit of Government policies, were included in the list of expenditures for meeting the cost of contracts outside the budget.

Replying to a further question on this point, Mr. Kawada said that the nature of these contracts whose costs must be met outside the budget was such as to preclude their cost being met out of the reserve fund.

Replying to a further question from the same interpellator, Mr. Takeo Haraguchi, director of the Exchange Bureau of the Finance Ministry, said there are two types of losses in foreign exchange transactions which have to be compensated by the Government, namely, those in exports and those in wartime insurance. He said that the sum of ¥500,000,000 had been reached after considering the results of the compensation system in past years.

In a further reply he stated that there may be cases where losses suffered by Japanese nationals in the Netherlands East Indies and the United States will be compensated from the fund for the indemnification of exchange losses.

U.S. Action Considered

Further questioned, Mr. Haraguchi said that there is no knowing when Japanese credits in the United States will be frozen, but that the Government intends to apply the compensation system to certain categories of losses suffered by Japan as the result of such a step on the part of the American Government.

Mr. Toyichi Ishizaka wanted to know whether the Government intended to abolish the system of compensating for losses of the Electric Power Generation and Transmission Company, to which Mr. Gotaro Ogawa, Communications Minister, replied that he would take the responsibility of putting the company in a position where it could pay its way.

The interpellator suggested that the fund amounting to ¥150,000,000 in the 1941-2 general budget is larger than is warranted.

The Finance Minister replied that the large size of the reserve fund was due to the fact that the Government might at any time be called upon to expend large amounts of money, according to the development of the international situation.

Tax Prospects Favorable

Next, Mr. Tokusaburo Takeda, asking how the Government intended to execute the 1941-2 budget, received the following reply from the Finance Minister:

"We are confident of being able to raise as much from taxes in the coming year as we have in the current fiscal year. I fail to see any signs that economic conditions will be aggravated in the next fiscal year. While it is true that the 1941-2 budget exceeds the current budget, it does not follow there will be an increase in the demand for materials corresponding to the increase in the budget."

Traders Uncertain As to New Order

the evils of liberalistic economy should be remedied. It was a grave mistake on the part of the Government to consider the pursuit of profit as contrary to national aims. Rejection of the desire to profit was certain to wither enterprise, decrease production and bring on heavy reduction in tax revenue. To place emphasis on matter to the neglect of man, and to attempt a radical reform in the organic structure of national economy would destroy all economic activity and turn Japan into another Soviet Republic. Ownership of enterprise and management of it are inseparable in principle. In company business, directors should be elected by a plenary session of shareholders as hitherto, but in case certain enterprisers have acted contrary to State aims, such men should be repudiated by suitable State machinery organized for the purpose. The Corporate Accounting Control Ordinance should be prevented from disregarding the spirit of enterprise which has so long fostered national economy and from depriving enterprisers of all future prospects.

Views Expressed Candidly

Some of these points were more or less wide of the mark because the recommendation had been drafted before the Government gave out the Outlines, but all expressed in quite a candid manner the views entertained in the business world at the time.

Although the Outlines, as published, made no reference to the separation of capital from enterprise, they gave rise to doubts, by their peculiar phraseology, that the step was implied.

Thus, in the Diet, Representative Fukuichi Morita charged Commerce and Industry Minister Kobayashi with having at the back of his mind the dea of this separation when dividing, as he does, business into capital, enterprise and labor.

"Officers of the proposed industrial organizations, according to the Outlines," said Mr. Morita, "are to be appointed or dismissed by central economic bodies. This provision makes it unnecessary for an enterpriser to be at once the capitalist."

In the House of Peers, Atsushi Akaike, declared that the "comprehensive planned economy" mentioned in the Outlines was liable to be confused with the Marxian economic doctrine. Premier Konoye, naturally, denied any such implication and said that what it meant was that the entire economic resources of the nation must be concentrated on the aim of surmounting the emergency situation.

Doubts Erased

Another point that gave rise to doubts was the principle of public weal first. It was objected that it gave the impression of repudiating private gain altogether. Premier Konoye explained that by putting public weal first, it was not meant that private gain should be repudiated. In the new economic order, all enterprisers must operate on their autonomous responsibilities and work by initiative and invention toward increasing production and profit. It was only the idea of placing above all other things that was combatted.

Still, it was noted that private profit was to be restricted to a considerable extent. Speculative and monopolistic profit detrimental to healthy national economy must be curbed, while profit can be increased only in enterprises which are serving State aims by increasing production. The Commerce and Industry Minister explained that considerable profit would be recognized in cases where amortization is important, while the computation of profit is to be made on the basis of production cost and other strictly above-board costs. One thing he made clear, and that is that by "just profit," he has no fixed formula in mind.

In regard to standard rates of profit in connection with the Corporate Accounting Control Ordinance, Mr. Kobayashi has replied that, in general, those ranging from 0.8 to 10 per cent are considered proper, while enterprises with large amortizations to be taken into account are to be considered apart.

FOREIGN LANGUAGES DEFENDED IN CHUGAI

Noted Literary Critic Reminds That Germany Encourages Such Studies

Lifting a strong voice against the "persecution" of foreign language students, Mr. Kiyoshi Miki, noted philosopher, and literary critic, explains why the Education Ministry does not clarify its policy toward the learning of foreign languages at schools in his article entitled "The Unrest of the Students of Foreign Languages in Japan" published by the Chugai Shogyo.

"In Tokyo, a middle school student was slapped by a man in a street car when he was studying English. I wonder whether this boy decided to quit the study of English or to study it with renewed spirit. I think that this boy is not the only one victimized on tram-cars. There are many people in this city, I imagine, who read the books and magazines written in foreign languages on trams and buses while raising their eyes now and then to see if the 'Ku Klux Klan' of the New Structure are not approaching them.

"I myself was advised recently by a friend of mine to stop reading German books on the tram or bus. Nevertheless, I open my German books in the car sometimes. But up to now, I have been lucky enough to see no rascals around me, who would snatch the book from my hand.

Termed Troublesome

"Yet it is manifest that vague unrest and anxiety have occupied the minds of the intelligentsia of Japan, who mostly know one foreign language or two. To the intellectuals of rather advanced ages, the anti-foreign languages storm is not extremely untolerable, though it is quite troublesome. But to the students of middle schools it works a havoc. These students have to open their English text-books and study hard in order to pass the examinations whether it is at their homes or in the street cars, and the studying of them in the latter unfortunately invites the violences of the 'Ku Klux Klan.'

"Those who hate to see the scenes of English study in trams are advised to go to the Education Ministry as the boy said in protest. At the same time I would like to ask the Education Ministry to announce its policy toward the learning of foreign languages in Japan in definite terms as soon as possible so that the intelligentsia of this country can set their minds accordingly.

"During the last Great War, when the stock of the books imported from foreign countries was diminishing steadily to a great alarm of those deeply concerned with education, a noted scholar said that the stoppage of the importation of foreign books would have a serious effect on the education in this country. This opinion aroused a storm among the reading classes, and it took a considerable time before the storm quieted. Some of the opposition, however, did not reject foreign culture as a whole, but attacked the defects in the methods of German educational system.

'Explanation' Given

"Generally speaking, the Japanese lack the ability of observing things in the phase of their functioning. That is, to observe one thing in relation to others. One thing may be necessary at one time, and not at another time. There is no man who is absolutely an enemy of others nor the one who is absolutely a friend of others. This can be applied to the study of foreign languages.

"When I traveled through Manchoukuo last summer, I was told that the Japanese who were proving themselves real help to the Manchurians were those who knew Manchurian very well and the Japanese who were making good jobs for the promotion of the welfare of White Russians are those who are well versed in Russian. This fact tells us that the Japanese should learn foreign languages if they want to assume great activities abroad.

"The people in Japan who disapprove the learning of foreign languages must know that in Germany where the national spirit is riding high the study of foreign languages is encouraged very much by the Government."

JOB IN COAL MINE TAKEN BY BILLIARDS CHAMPION

Holds Profession Contrary to Times so Helps Japan Increase Production

Mr. Kiichiro Tatsumi, one of the leading professional billiard players in Japan, has bid goodbye to this career and is now working in a coal mine in Fukuoka Prefecture, the Osaka Mainichi says.

Since his public appearance at Yawata last year, he has not participated in any of the tournaments and his friends were concerned over his whereabouts until he accidentally was located at the mines. When interviewed, he stated that this is no time to be disported in such an unhealthy profession and he has made up his mind to serve the country by working in the mines. The wages at the mines are much less than what he can make in tournaments, but he realizes that his profession was unbecoming of the current national crisis and has finally decided to work as a miner in parallel with "increase the production" cries.

NIPPON CLUB SENSATION MEETS AOKI WEDNESDAY

Six Well-Matched Bouts on Card at Hibiya Hall Next Week

A ten-round battle, featuring Toshio Fukuda, sensational newcomer from the Nippon Boxing Club and Toshiro Aoki will head the boxing card taking place Wednesday night at 6:30 o'clock at the Hibiya Public Hall.

Six other bouts are slated with Goro Kikuchi meeting Yoichiro Hanada in the eight-round semi-final, and T. Sawada facing Y. Kin in special event bout of six-rounds.

Fukuda has come up with some of the best fighting seen locally in recent weeks. An efficient worker, he has swarmed over his last two opponents in great style, knocking out Snake Yamada in five-rounds and handing S. Nakamura a thorough beating last week.

On the other hand, Toshiro Aoki, the pride of the Fujii Club is being groomed for a fight with Soldier Sasazaki, outstanding featherweight of Nippon. Aoki's record places him in a favorable light and a good fight is expected.

The remainder of the program will consist of two six-rounders; S. Kinoshita vs. T. Futaba, Y. Inouye vs. R. Li and two four rounders, D. Yoshimura vs. K. Ohkusa and H. Ishida vs. M. Nashikawa.

Lecture Describes Caves at Yunkang

co-mingled. The famous great Buddha is at first glance very imposing but a more careful survey will reveal it is not at all gross but rather has a large amount of nervous grace. There are also many chubby angles with lovely round faces, who are unforgettable for their human attractions. But what impresses most after all at Yunkang is the splendid beauty of the linear carving peculiar to the Northern Wei style. That wonderful tradition of line which developed during the Ch'in and Han Dynasties as sharp linear designs on bronze vessels became ripe and harmonious through the years right down to the Six Dynasties and at Yunkang it produced masterpieces, in which spiritual sharpness did not altogether disappear, but mellowed down into something which is appealing to human senses. In the history of Chinese art this linear art of the Six Dynasties affords an interesting contrast to the art of tone and mass which was presently started in the Sui and T'ang Dynasties. Here in Yunkang, in Cave Three, there are masterpieces of sculpture belonging to the Sui Dynasty and we can draw interesting comparisons.

As for the subject matter of the sculptures of the caves, one finds a great many kinds of Buddhistic figures. Among them are sometimes found deities of the esoteric sects such as Shiva Bishunu and others, and these present important materials for iconographical studies, which would contribute much to the history of Buddhism in China. From the artistic point of view what interests one most would be the fact that there are many Two Seated Buddhas and also many Meditating Boddhisattvas carved all over the walls. These two kinds of Buddhistic figures, with highly human aspects must have been very popular at that time. The story of the Two Seated Buddhas is described in Saddha ma described in the Saddharma-pundarika Sutra as a miracle. When Shaka was delivering a sermon, a pagoda suddenly appeared out of the ground and Prabhutaratna, who was in the pagoda praising him with a loud voice, invited him to sit by his side. It is a pleasure to see often in these deserted caves such a scene as the intimate discourse of two deities. As to the Meditating Boddhisattva, it is a difficult question of iconography to decide whether it represents Kwannon or Maitreya, or Prince Siddhartha, who contemplates under the linden tree, but whoever it may be, it is a young, beautiful Buddhistic figure that is pondering on the sorrows of human life. Certainly the frequent recurrence of this deity in a rather sentimental position of mediation gives a touch of humanity to these out-of-the-way caves.

Thus, the greatest Buddhistic remains in China, the Yunkang Caves, not only have a historical value but also are very beautiful as works of art. It is a very reassuring fact for all lovers of Eastern art that these Yunkang Caves are fairly well preserved, and that now they are most carefully protected by the Japanese army and scholars and also that it is possible conveniently to visit the place, even under the present conditions in China.

NOTED PAINTINGS SEIZED

Italian Police Takes Canvases Owned By Englishman

United Press

FLORENCE, February 15.—Police today seized two famous canvases by the 18th century Italian painters Gian Tipolo and Francesco Guardi, which had been sequestered from the property of an English connoisseur.

The Englishman, Mr. Arthur Spender, was understood to have been the founder of the British Institute of Florence. Several years before the war he was decorated with the Order Commendatore by the Italian Crown.

In 1938 authorities refused him permission to export the two paintings since they were considered Italian masterpieces. When Italy entered the war the paintings disappeared.

Yesterday sequestration officers discovered them in possession of a former chambermaid in the Spender household and sent them to the Pinacoteca art galleries in Bologna.

U.S. CONTEMPLATES HUGE TUTUILA BASE

House Committee Hearing Testimony Discloses Complete Establishment Planned

United Press

WASHINGTON, February 14.—High-ranking naval officials today told the House Naval Affairs Committee that the navy contemplates construction of a complete naval base on Tutuila Island in Samoa because of its strategic importance to the United States' Pacific defense scheme.

During the testimony, Mr. Carl Vinson, Georgia Democrat and Committee chairman asked, "This is establishing a complete naval base at Samoa, is it not?"

"Yes, sir," Captain Harry W. Hill answered. He is a member of the Commander-in-Chief's staff. He explained increasing importance of air power had given Samoa new and strategic importance and that Samoa was now regarded as the "southwestern point in the whole Pacific line."

Guam Project Approved

The Committee approved without extended comment a proposed $4,700,000 appropriation for Fleet-operating facilities and bomb-proof shelters at Guam. However, this controversial question is expected to be discussed fully at an executive session later.

Rear-Admiral Ben Moreell, Chief of Civil Engineers, said the Guam appropriation is intended mainly for harbor improvements and declined to discuss the appropriation for bombproof shelters in a public session.

However, Admiral Moreell said it was intended to protect the "key personnel" and that he considered the item to be very important.

Wisdom Doubted

Mr. Arthur B. Jenks, Republican Representative of New Hampshire, suggested the appropriation was intended to begin fortification of Guam despite the previous opposition of Congress. He said the Pacific was a big ocean and he doubted whether the United States should extend its defenses this far.

"That's all the more reason why we need it," Mr. Melvin J. Maas, Republican Representative of Minnesota, declared.

Meanwhile, the House Naval Affairs Committee unanimously approved a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to sell or loan obsolete naval equipment to the Philippines Government. Amendments to the bill provide that the Secretary's authority ends when the Philippines acquires its independence and prohibit transfer by the Philippines of any equipment received from the United States.

Speedy Action Seen

Committee members indicated that the bill would be expedited in the House because of the critical situation in the Pacific.

Mr. Warren G. Magnuson, Democratic Representative of Washington, said he believed the first materials which would be transferred to the Philippines would be torpedoes for the Islands' motor torpedo boat fleet. He declared the measure would be more than a goodwill gesture and that the Philippines would obtain considerable material aid.

The bill also authorized the Secretary of the Navy to perform services for the Philippines such as installing equipment at cost. Mr. Magnuson said he believed the Philippines would receive obsolete materials at extremely nominal prices. The most pressing need, he said, is for torpedoes, approximately 1,000 of which were needed at present.

BREAD BUYING PROBLEM MAY CAUSE RATIONING

Endless Line Forms With Only Small Number of Persons Getting Single Loaf

Housewives with babies, high school students, office workers and others yesterday consisted the long line extending from the east entrance of Tokyo station to a bakery, waiting their turn to buy bread, says the Miyako.

Patient customers, who began to form the endless line around 3 o'clock, were able to slowly move toward the direction of the bakery when the long-expected bread was brought on a bicycle an hour later. Although a pound of bread was allotted to each customer, many disappointed persons had to go away empty-handed when the bread was sold out within a brief period of 30 minutes.

Mr. Koshi Hoshi, the proprietor of the bakery and head of the Kyobashi bakery union, said to the Miyako:

"The number of persons waiting to buy bread amazed me. I hope I didn't cause any inconvenience to the neighbors. Bread is sold from 7 to 8 o'clock in the morning and from 3 to 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The number of customers waiting to buy bread before the selling time has greatly increased in the past few days. It is no wonder when you consider that the idea of rice economy has been gradually understood by the citizens. I am thinking of issuing bread tickets so that everyone can buy a pound."

PANAMANIAN PRESIDENT WON'T BACK SHIPPERS

Issues Proclamation Disclaiming Responsibility for Ships Running Blockade

Domei

PANAMA, February 21.—President Arnolfo Arias, virtual dictator of the Panama Republic, today proclaimed that the Panama Government henceforth will not assume responsibility for risks or possible damage sustained by vessels flying the Panamanian flag which are engaged in activities conflicting with neutral status in war zones.

The proclamation issued by the President said that measures were taken in view of reports that vessels of Panamanian registry are preparing to engage in "certain activities" in European waters.

The decree was held significant in view that many United States vessels have been registered in Panama to evade the provisions of the Neutrality Act in carrying supplies to Britain. It was also understood that numerous vessels of Panamanian registry are plying in China waters.

Kobe Hospital to Use Piles of Ice Shavings Swept on Skating Rink

Negotiations are now under way between hospital directors and the Shuraku-kan skating rink in Kobe to use the ice shavings in the hospitals of the city, the Asahi reports. The rink mentioned has an area of about 1,600 square yards and by sweeping the surface every three hours to clear off the shavings, about 165 pounds of ice are collected each day. These shavings hitherto were either dumped in the sewer or sometimes had to be transported to the beach by trucks as it takes more time to melt than natural ice. The skating season opens in October and closes in April and if the shavings thus obtained can be used at the hospitals, it would mean a considerable economy both to the rink and to the hospitals. If the plan is a success, hospitals in Osaka will also avail themselves of shavings produced at the Asahi Kaikan and at the Kabukiza skating rinks.

AMERICAN SCHOOL FIVE DEFEATS KEIO CAGERS

Black and Orange Basketball Team Breaks Losing Streak With 51-22 Win

The Black and Orange basketball five of the American School whipped the Keio Yoka squad, breaking its losing streak of three games in a row, at the American School court, Friday afternoon.

The visiting university men scored three baskets in a row before the home quintet settled down to pile up seven points to their credit. The rest of the quarter was an exchange of shots by both teams, and the quarter ended with the close score of 11-10 in favor of the American School.

Again in the second quarter the Keio sharpshooters swished in two long shots to lead 14-11. Then the Durgin-Brown-Downs trio went on a picnic chalking up 10 markers in a row, keeping the visiting cagers' score down to two baskets in the whole quarter. The Black and Orange basketeers led 21-14 at the half time.

The high school team outplayed the university team, and outscored them 12-4 in the third quarter. All the home team scored at least one shot apiece, and limited the visitors to two baskets for the whole third quarter.

Starting the last quarter with a score of 33-18 in their favor, the American School five had a real field day piling up 18 points to their credit, and limiting the opponents to only 4 points. In a fine scoring spree Durgin made more than half of his total score of 15 in the last quarter. With the game on ice for the Black and Orange, the whole second string saw action in the last few minutes of the fray.

OUTLOOK NOT BRIGHT FOR INDIES PARLEY

Member of Yoshizawa Delegation Says Final Success Long Way Off

The outlook for the trade negotiations now in progress between Japan and the Netherlands Indies still is fairly hopeful, though their complete success will not be brought about until some distant date, according to Mr. Kunio Kawamoto of the Overseas Ministry, who arrived at Kobe yesterday morning from Batavia aboard the Nissho Maru, Domei reports.

Mr. Kawamoto is chief of the second section of the South Seas Development Bureau of the Overseas Ministry. He has been in the Netherlands Indies for the past six month, taking an active part in the Japan-Dutch parley since he went there with Commerce and Industry Minister Ichizo Kobayashi, who originally headed the Japanese delegation.

Met at the Kobe port yesterday morning by a Domei representative, Mr. Kawamoto said:

"Mr. Kenkichi Yoshizawa, the new special envoy of Japan to the East Indies, has been well received in all quarters. When I met him a short time before my departure, he said that the notes exchanged between the two countries had been studied fully on both sides. I am sure the parley will be brought to a success conclusion if no adverse changes are brought about in the present international situation. Surely, we cannot afford to indulge in an optimistic view of the future of the parley. On the other hand, no pessimism is warranted."

Returning on the same boat was Mr. Takeshi Minakami of the Tokyo Imperial University seismic research institute, who has been studying volcanoes in the Netherlands Indies for the past month and a half. Interviewed by Domei, Mr. Minakami said:

"There are many volcanoes in the Indies. Roughly speaking, there are 20 in Java and 14 in Sumatra. Celebes and Borneo also have many, but they are all dormant. Due to these volcanoes, the islands abound in spas, as in Japan. However, these hot springs are not utilized to any great extent. It has been suggested that these spas could be most effectively developed by the Japanese.

"There is a fine institute for volcanic research in the Indies, which formerly employed many German experts. Since the start of the war, however, these Germans have been deprived of their positions. But the result of their work is to be noted on all sides: In Java, for instance, each mountain has many dwelling houses along its sides, which is necessitated by the dense population of the island. There are automatic facilities to warn of eruptions."

The Nissho Maru reached Kobe at 8:30 o'clock Monday morning carrying about 70 passengers from the Netherlands Indies. Aboard the vessel were Mrs. Yoshi Furui, whose Dutch husband recently was arrested by the Netherlands authorities on espionage charges, and 36 Japanese women and children who were evacuated from the islands, according to Domei.

Philippines Order Reserves to Duty units at a distance of from 20 to 25 miles.

Guns Protected

To repulse an invasion from the rear, trench mortars have been emplaced in the deep ravines covering the "Rock" in such a manner that it is believed the mortars would be invulnerable to any air attack except by dive-bombers.

The 155-m.m. guns are emplaced in tunnels in the fortress covering both channels, and army officers claim their crews could easily pick off small craft. These guns are invulnerable to anything except straight-on shelling from the water area which they command.

The pride of the archipelago's defenses, however, are the 26 long-range naval bombers and the three pursuit squadrons of the army which defense officials believe give the Philippines enough strength to ward off, temporarily at least, anything but a major invasion.

SINGAPORE, March 6.—Combined exercises of Malaya's military and civilian defense forces began yesterday.

The maneuvers will simulate, it is believed, what actually would happen should war approach or take place in Malaya.

The first phase of the maneuvers will be continued until Saturday. Military, naval and air forces, during the first phase of exercises, are to practice what would happen when tension with a potential enemy became most severe and war seemed imminent. The second and more vital phase will be carried out as though Malaya actually were at war.

Dewing Directs

Major-General Richard H. Dewing, Chief of Staff, is directing the exercises, enabling Air-Marshal Sir Robert Brooke-Popham, commander-in-chief of Britain's Far Eastern Forces, to play the role of commander-in-chief.

Vice-Admiral Sir Geoffrey Layton, commander-in-chief of the China station, is co-operating closely with Major-General Dewing.

Australian troops are participating in exercises although it is not known whether they will move into war positions. Civil defense services have been drilling throughout the week as blackouts have been practiced. Civil government departments also are simulating war conditions.

Quezon Acts on Crisis

Domei

MANILA, March 7.—President Manuel L. Quezon today acted to prevent a political crisis involving himself and Mr. Jose Yule, Speaker of the Assembly, when he wrote to Mr. Yulo pleading for national unity and requesting the latter not to resign from the presidency of the National Party and the Assembly speakership as a result of the President's action on February 19 in supporting Mr. Sergio Osmena for re-election as Vice-President without consulting Mr. Yulo.

"When the provincial governors passed the resolution," which was approved without consultation with Mr. Yulo, they had every reason to assume they were only following your leadership,' Mr. Quezon wrote.

The President also said he could not sanction or tolerate any act of disrespect toward the recognized head of the party—Mr. Yulo—which would be considered an indirect criticism of the governors for pressing the issue of the re-election of Mr. Quezon and Mr. Osmena without consultation of all concerned.

All indications are that Mr. Quezon will be elected to a second term as President of the Philippines Commonwealth Government, beginning in 1942.

To Draft Quezon

United Press

MANILA, March 7.—Mr. Manuel L. Quezon will serve his second term as President of the Philippines Commonwealth Government, beginning in 1942, according to all available indications.

Despite the severe illness, apparently an aggravated tubercular condition, which has confined the fiery President to his bed for the past three months, the "draft Quezon" movement today was in full swing under the leadership of the Nacionalista Party and boasting both the passive and active consent of the majority of Filipinos.

Mr. Quezon told a special committee of eight provincial governors that he is willing to run for re-election if he is "drafted" and provided that Vice-President Sergio Osmena is his running-mate.

"If you want me to run," he replied to a point-blank question by the committee, "you must also support Mr. Osmena."

The committee told Mr. Quezon that there is an overwhelming sentiment in all the provinces in favor of his re-election and pointed out that if he is not eager to run, he would be drafted anyway.

The reported dissension over, Mr. Quezon's selection of Mr. Osmena as his running-mate is considered a matter of political face-saving by supporters of Assembly Speaker Jose Yulo and Floor Leader Quintin Paredes.

Offices Sought

Political quarters intimate that Mr. Quezon failed to consult with either of the two men before making his decision. In addition it is believed that the two wanted to force Mr. Quezon to reach a "compromise" whereby Mr. Yulo would be guaranteed the presidency of the new Senate and Mr. Paredes would be made Speaker of the House.

There is little possibility that either Mr. Yulo or Mr. Paredes would "revolt" against Mr. Quezon because such action would be tantamount to political suicide in view of Mr. Quezon's strength.

Vice-President Osmena is said to have told the governors that he is "always ready to serve."

Addressing the convention of governors Mr. Osmena urged Mr. Quezon's re-election, terming Mr. Quezon as the nation's "symbol of progress and unity . . . a man whose statesmenship has reached full maturity."

Although Mr. Quezon's illness has been serious enough to force him to forego all State affairs for the past three months, Secretary of Interior Rafael Alunan declared that the chief executive is "strong enough to run this Government for the next 10 years."

Mr. Quezon's selection of Mr. Osmena as his runnning-mate is considered significant, since the Vice-President, under the amended constitution, will serve as President for the last two of the four-year term.

In Sixth Year

Mr. Quezon is now completing his sixth year as President of the Commonwealth. Under the recent constitutional amendments, the single six-year term was abolished and the President is permitted to serve for two consecutive terms of four years each. After serving two years of his second term in the event he is elected Mr. Quezon would be forced to retire from the scene.

Mr. Osmena has consistently supported Mr. Quezon since their split in 1933 over the issue of accepting the Hawes-Cutting-Hare Independence Act. Mr. Osmena and Mr. Manuel Roxas, present Finance Secretary, negotiated the act in Washington but after their return the legislature, under the guidance of Mr. Quezon, then president of the Senate, rejected the measure.

Mr. Quezon went to Washington, obtained the present Tydings-McDuffie Independence Act, with virtually the same provisions as the first act, and it was accepted by the Philippines legislature—a triumph of "face-saving" for Mr. Quezon which ended the apparent Osmena "threat" to Mr. Quezon's leadership. By midyear of 1935 the two groups had been combined and Mr. Quezon and Mr. Osmena were triumphant in the first national elections.

Since that time, the more dynamic Mr. Quezon has gathered greater power into his own hands, with the consent of the legislature until now he controls completely the executive and legislative branches. Mr. Osmena, while still high in the affections of the people, has become more or less of a political satellite of Mr. Quezon. Political observers point out, therefore, that with Mr. Osmena as Vice-President during the forthcoming second term, Mr. Quezon would still be the guiding power in the last two years although Mr. Osmena would be nominal head. Thus, Mr. Quezon would be assured of continued political control over the Government when he could resume the presidency coincident with independence in 1946.

There is little question in the minds of observers that Mr. Quezon would be re-elected. His political machine has a strangle-hold on the entire archipelago, and in addition he enjoys the support of the majority of the voters, partially because of his recognized leadership in the face of a turbulent Pacific situation and the economic troubles confronting the commonwealth as it approaches independence.

Indicative of the manner in which the common people look up to Mr. Quezon is the following letter, written to President Quezon by a poverty-stricken Moro woman protesting against the alleged failure of an American company to pay an insurance claim:

"Under your dignity of honor, being the father and mother of the Philippine Government who can give death and life or rather social justice to any poor citizen like me....

"The (American company) may be believed that because we are ignorant they are going to ignore us in this occasion, but as to my own opinion, they can not do so as you, being the father and mother of our country who has the Social Justice which you don't like that others may cheat one another. . ."

2 WORLD INDOOR RECORDS SHATTERED AT N.Y. MEET

Meadows Tops Own Pole Vault Mark, Borain Captures 600-Meter Event

Domei

NEW YORK, March 9.—Two world indoor records were smashed at the 22nd Knights of Columbus track meet held at Madison Square Garden here last night

Veteran Earl Meadows, former University of Southern California star, co-holder of the world's outdoor pole vault record, smashed his own indoor record of 14 feet 3⅜ inches, when he topped the bar at 14 feet 7⅛ inches.

A new record also was established when John Borain of Asbury Park, New Jersey, took the Casey 600-Yard Invitation Race in one minute 10 2/10 seconds, bettering the former record set at the 52nd National A.A.U. Indoor Championships held at the Gardens on February 24, 1940, by Belcher, unattached, whose time was one minute 11 6/10 seconds.

Al Blozis of Georgetown University heaved the shot 56 feet 2⅞ inches, failing to break the world record of 56 feet 6 inches for the 16-pound shotput which he established at the 20th Annual Indoor Track and Field Championships of the International A.A.A.A. on March 1.

YOUNG PIANIST WINS SYMPHONY THRONGS

Concert Audience Is Pleased With Playing of 14-Year-Old Girl

By I. J. Fisher

Mr. Naotada Yamamoto, conductor, presented the New Symphony Orchestra in a special concert last evening in Hibiya Public Hall and the turnout was extremely gratifying.

Having studied conducting in Europe for several years and being active in teaching and conducting in Tokyo for a long time, Mr. Yamamoto made a good impression last night with his forceful manner on the podium and in his ability to control the forces.

However, the hit of the evening was tall and slender Miss Yoshiko Kuroda, a 14-year-old pianist, who last year won the Musical Concours special award by the Ministry of Education.

Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor opened the program followed by Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor, opus 37. The second half of the concert was given to choral numbers: the Lied and Chorus from Wagner's opera The Flying Dutchman, and a Japanese number by Mr. Kiyoshi Nobutoki, Umi Yukaba, orchestrated by Mr. Yamamoto. The singing was by the chorus of Jiyu Gakuen, with Miss Miho Nagato, soprano, as Senta, and Mrs. Mitsue Takemoto, mezzo-soprano, singing the role of Mary, Senta's nurse.

The Symphony is a magnificent work and its implications are stirring. The playing of the first movement was not so satisfactory with the exception of the end of the second movement. In the slow, brooding section of the first movement immediately preceding the horn theme the orchestral choirs were not together, the violas were definitely off in spots, and first violins not in unison in the downward leaps. There was a lack of emotion.

The Andante brought forth the emotional feeling. Violas here were effective, and the solo horn and violin quite acceptable. In the third movement it was pleasing to note how the original theme of the woodwinds was given prominence and the accompaniment by the strings subdued. It was a lovely movement but when the first subject was repeated there was not the exquisite effect of floating music. The Finale was given with wildness and awe, and glorius breadth in the chorale-like tune. The trombone trio was splendidly done and the whole movement quite thrilling.

Little Miss Kuroda was given an ovation and several curtain calls after the excellence of her performance. She has fire, temperament, musicality and an advanced technical development. There was breadth, depth, and quality in her tonal work, beauty of touch in the delicate passages and every run, trill and turn was so cleanly given. The sense of rhythm in her playing is unusually well felt, and her rendition of the difficult Rubenstein cadenza was superb. Of course, the interpretation was that of her mentor, Professor Leo Sirota, but the natural gifts of the young pianist were evident. The orchestra gave excellent support and fused perfectly with the soloist.

The chorus sang with rhythmic feeling in the Spinning Song and good tone in the lower range but in the upper reaches the soprano quality was very thin. However, these are young students with immature voices. That they had been well-trained was evident and the credit is due to Mrs. Margarete Netke. Miss Nagato has a fine lyric voice of lovely quality, sings with feeling, but was inclined to spread and thus thin-out her highest notes. The mezzo-soprano, Mrs. Takemoto, has also been heard before in concert work, and has a pleasing voice that she handles with care.

The large audience was very enthusiastic and expressed appreciation with rounds of applause for conductor, orchestra, soloists, and the chorus. It was a varied and pleasing concert.

These Gals Have Pull

Pull is what it takes, and pull is what these youngsters put out in the newly-designed method of exercising with a halberd as shown here. Authorities plan to spread this type of calisthenics among the younger generation.

Pact Guards Peace In East Asia Sphere

well as to that of the world by their procuring each its own place and enjoying common prosperity among them. "For that purpose," he proceeded, "I need hardly say that it is of vital importance that there should be security and stability in this part of East Asia. Therefore, when there arose a dispute concerning the boundary between Thai and French Indo-China last year, I sincerely wished that the dispute would be amicably settled. Unfortunately, however, hostilities began between the two countries. The Japanese Government considered that it would be undesirable in the interests of the whole of East Asia if this state of affairs were allowed to last long and, therefore, we have decided to mediate between the two countries."

The Foreign Minister then spoke of the readiness of the Japanese Government to endeavor to bring about the settlement of the dispute with determination and responsibility.

He concluded his address in the following strain:

"I wish from the bottom of my heart that both the French and Thai delegates would show at this Tokyo conference for the settlement of the dispute such a perfect understanding and earnest spirit of co-operation as were manifest by them at the Saigon conference for the cessation of hostilities so that the dispute may speedily be settled and friendly relations restored between the two countries, thus making an invaluable contribution toward the peace and stability of Greater East Asia."

The Foreign Minister's address was responded to by the chief delegates of Thai and French Indo-China. They expressed thanks for the good offices offered by Japan and wished that the negotiations for settlement of the dispute involving their countries would be brought to a speedy settlement.

Then Mr. Ototsugu Saito, head of the secretariate of the Japanese delegation, announced the decision reached by the heads of the secretariates of the delegations of the countries concerned in regard to the procedure of the conference.

The conference lasted for 40 minutes.

The spirit of cordiality displayed by the delegates of the three countries at their first formal meeting gave rise to hope for a satisfactory conclusion of the negotiations.

The first informal meeting of the delegates of the three countries was held at the Foreign Minister's official residence at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the following day. At the meeting, there was an unreserved exchange of views among those present on concrete questions in regard to the settlement of the dispute.

At this meeting, the Japanese mediators proposed an extension for two weeks of the truce agreement, which was to lapse on February 11. The French and Thai delegates agreed.

The second informal meeting of the delegations of the three countries took place on February 9. The meeting, which lasted for two hours, was devoted to a discussion of concrete questions.

The third informal meeting of the delegations came on February 17. It was at this meeting that a draft Japanese plan to settle the border dispute was presented.

About a week elapsed before the fourth informal meeting of the delegations took place. During the interval, the Japanese mediators carried on individual negotiations with the representatives of Thai and Indo-China.

On February 24, Japan proposed a further extension of the truce agreement, which was to expire on February 25. The move was prompted by the thought of the possibility of renewed activity by Thai and Indo-China troops.

Japan's final mediation program was presented at the fourth informal meeting of the delegations held on February 24.

The Thai Government communicated its acceptance of the Japanese proposals to Japan the following day.

There was a delay in of the French reply to the Japanese plan. In order to meet a situation which might be caused by collapse of the mediation negotiations, the authorities on February 28 ordered evacuation of Japanese in French Indo-China.

The French Ambassador called on Foreign Minister Matsuoka on March 2 to intimate the French attitude toward the mediation proposals, which was one of accepting them with reservations. The final French reply which was promised by the French Ambassador during the meeting he had with the Foreign Minister on March 4 failed to arrive until the morning of March 6. The meeting between Foreign Minister Matsuoka and the French Ambassador held following the arrival of the French reply resulted in the issuance of a joint communique of Japan, Thai, and Indo-China announcing Thai and French agreement to the principal points of Japan's mediation plan.

The repeated conferences held between Foreign Minister Matsuoka and the French Ambassador on March 6 assured a satisfactory settlement of the Thai-Indo-China border dispute.

PHILIPPINES SPEAKER RETRACTS RESIGNATION

Jose Yulo Answers Quezon's Plea to Retain Post for Commonwealth Unity

Domei

MANILA, March 8.—Mr. Jose Yulo, Speaker of the Assembly, today told Mr. Manuel Quezon, Philippines President, that he would not resign the speakership and the presidency of the Nationalist Party, as he had previously threatened.

Mr. Yulo said he would not resign his posts in view of President Quezon's plea for national unity and the President's written request for him not to resign.

Mr. Yulo had planned to resign the positions because Mr. Quezon had not consulted him before supporting Mr. Sergio Osmena for re-election as Vice-President of the Commonwealth.

SOUTHWARD MOVES ARE NATURAL AIMS

Retired Admiral Writes Japan Should Receive American Co-operation in Step

Japan's southward expansion is a natural force, or rather a force of necessity, and no other power can check it, declares Rear-Admiral Kunishige Taketomi, retired, in an article in the March issue of the magazine Sozo, or the "Creation."

He says that the cultures of Japan and the United States are fundamentally different in their quality and direction, the Pacific problems arising from the fact. So the statesmen of the both countries should take a prudent attitude in treating these two different cultures, he says.

The Pacific is a great road and railway that God has bestowed upon Japan and America, and if the United States utilizes it properly it will contribute much to the promotion of world culture, he goes on.

Japan Should Watch

But at this time when the United States is gradually advancing its naval bases westward, Japan should carefully watch moves of the American navy, he continues.

Should the American navy intend to hinder by actual power the Japanese policy to create an East Asia Co-prosperity Sphere, we should rise with firm determination, he declares.

"Needless to say, Japan and the United States are the two Powers standing face to face with the Pacific between themselves," says Rear-Admiral Taketomi. "In closely examining the contents and direction of the culture of each of these countries, however, we find they are quite contrary to one another.

"Japan's culture is the one that advanced eastward and was assimilated and purified in this land in a considerable long period of time. It is the culture of comprehension and spiritual understanding.'

America Moves West

"America's culture, on the contrary, is the one that advanced westward and became prosperous in that new world of material and scientific civilization. Problems arise from the fact that the two cultures, with different content and direction, are confronting each other across the Pacific Ocean.

"In other words, Japan and America are the two main terminals with high voltage, the Pacific being, in this sense, an electric field where the two currents cross. But we must not overlook the fact that each of these spiritual and material civilizations has its own ideal. The most important problem is how to make them cross each other.

"If we fail to find proper means, these electric currents will spark, resulting in such a disastrous thing as a Japanese-American war. We, therefore, have to take a prudent attitude on this point. The melting of these two civilizations must be carried out amicably in a long period of time. Statesmen of the two countries have to bear it in mind.

Is Great Highway

"The Pacific is 5,000 sea-miles in width from east to west and 6,000 sea-miles from south to north. From the view point of traffic, it is a great road and railway that nature has constructed. With no third countries between Japan and the United States, the Pacific is entirely open sea and not bound by international law, providing extreme conveniences in maritime and air transportation.

"Moreover, the expenditures of transportation on the ocean are not surprisingly high.

"Thus Japan and America are neighboring countries connected by the blessed ocean. From an economic angle, it can be said that the United States has a duty to turn the great quantity of static natural resources lurking under the Asia continent into dynamic resources through sea transportation, thus contributing not only to the promotion of the world culture but also to the creation of a new world.

"Some people say space and distance have been shortened with the development of transportation and communication means such as trains, planes, steamers, radio, etc.

Distance Still Important

"Despite that, there still remains distance. It is more distant from here to San Francisco than to Honolulu, much more so to London. However greatly human wisdom may progress, there still remains 'far and short'.

"'This 'distance' is the decisive factor in war. The consumption of military strength is said to be in inverse proportion to distance. From such a point of view, the distance of the Pacific is of much strategical importance both for Japan and the United States.

"Even amateurs can recognize where the roped-off areas of the both countries are on the Pacific. The Pacific is divided into two parts with 180 degree east longitude, each forming an impregnable area, it is commonly said.

"However, at this time when the American naval bases are being advanced westward, utilizing British possessions south of the equator, we must strictly watch the moves of the United States navy, much more so if they should use Singapore.

"What move will the American fleet in Hawaii take in the future? What conveniences will be provided to them by the British possessions south of the equator? These are what we must carefully watch.

"If the United States should hinder through actual power our way to create an East Asia Co-prosperity Sphere, it is the time we must rise with firm determination.

"Japan is consolidating the structure to advance southward. This is a natural force, or rather a force of necessity. No force can check it!"

FORESTRY BUREAU PLANS FIRE RESISTING BELTS

Certain Trees Slow to Burn Will Be Planted Throughout Forests

In view of the high efficiency demonstrated in the recent forest fire in Mount Rokko, the Osaka Forestry Bureau is contemplating planting camellia, peach and other trees considered to have strong resistance against heat in State forests within its jurisdiction to minimize the costly forest fires damages, the Osaka Jiji says.

In 19 prefectures under its jurisdiction, there were during 1940 more than 90 forest fires which ruined some 750 acres of forest and caused an enormous loss. In 1935, the Forestry Bureau planted experimentally a large number of camellia, peach and other trees, which are comparatively hard to burn, in narrow strips in the State forests in Rokko, and other mountains. During a fire which broke out in Mount Rokko recently, these trees were largely responsible for stopping the further spread as the flames were extinguished while they were being checked by one of these strips.

Japanese Press Comments

cuous arguments in opposition to the lease-lend bill warrants the view that isolationists are now of little account and that general trend of the American public opinion is now bringing their country to involvement in war.

The object of the lease-lend bill is to aid Britain by supplying arms to Great Britain. As the sending of troops to Britain is meaningless, the supply of arms means the cardinal factor of American aid to Britain.

It may perhaps not be wrong to conclude that the American participation in war will begin when the supply of arms to Britain is realized after the passage of the bill.

Granting the assertion of the American side that the supply of arms to Britain does not mean American participation in war, it seems to be inevitable that the war of Germany and Italy with Britain will become that of Germany and Italy with Britain and the United States when the bill is put into force.

It is recalled that Chanceller Adolf Hitler declared the other day that ships supplying arms to Britain would be torpedoed, whatever the nationality of ships.

We do not hesitate to state that the passage of the lease-lend bill by the Senate means one step of the European war toward world war.

BIG RESULTS SEEN IN LOFOTEN RAIDS

Political Significance of British Attack Held Greater Than Military Gain

United Press

LONDON, March 7.—Political implications of the British raid on Tuesday on the islands of Lofoten off the northern coast of Norway equals if not surpasses its military importance, reliable British sources said here today.

A Norwegian official told the press that when the British arrived off the islands, "powerful loudspeakers broadcast messages to the local population telling them friends were at hand and suggesting that crews of the British vessels would be willing to take any who wished to go to Britain and join Free Norwegian forces there.

"Hundreds of young men immediately lined upon the shore," the Norwegian official said. "This was the chance of a life-time and they took it. Our forces were there several hours allowing the young men to go to their homes and get their clothes packed.

"Among the 300 who came were a few married men who had been trained in the Norwegian army previously."

Composition of the British-Norwegian force which raided the islands still was not know here but observer surmised it must have been sizeable to assure ability to deal with any occasion which might arise.

The fate of numerous Norwegian "Quislings" captured probably depends on the outcome of a British and Norwegian exchange of views here, but the New York Times points out that no question of international law could arise because the "Quislings" were subject to Norwegian law.

Over 300 Norwegian volunteers, "Quislings" and German prisoners arrived in London about midnight last night from a north England port.

Islanders Punished

United Press

STOCKHOLM, March 7.—A state of emergency has been declared in the Lofoten islands off northern Norway because of British raids there, press dispatches from Oslo said today.

Mr. Josef Terboven, Reich Commissar of Norway, declared a state of emergency and fined the population of islands 100,000 crewns.

Press reports said several persons were arrested and charged with aiding the British. One person was executed, it was said.

Norwegians must provide for the families of all Germans stationed on the islands, Mr. Terboven also commanded.

The Oslo newspaper Nationen said German action taken in the islands was a warning against Norwegians opposing the Germans or believing British propaganda.

Yamada Nagamasa Acts as Head of Japanese Colony

in the 17th century. In this connection, it must be remembered that a keen rivalry develcped between the Japanese and the Dutch in connection with their trade with Thailand. In fact, the literature of the time testifies clearly to a number of slanderous remarks against the Japanese made by Dutch merchants to the usurper of the Thai throne.

Besides Yamada Nagamasa, many other Japanese were granted high rank in Thailand in recognition of their distinguished services in the cause of the kingdom, including Shiroye Kyuemon (Luang Sou Sattrou) mentioned above, Tsuda Matazayemon, Kiya Kyuzayemon, Kiya Yazayemon, Kinoshita Rokuyemon, Shobei-Dono, Ok Phra Sumihiro, Kimura Hanzayemon and others. But out of these it is Yamada Nagamasa alone whose name has become a household word in Japan. Mention of Thailand immediately calls up his name to Japanese people. This is due to an old popular story written in 1707 which made a hero of Yamada Nagamasa.

Its author, Tenjiku Tokubei, went to Thailand when he was 15 years old as a clerk to Mayebashi Seibei, who was captain of a Japanese trading vessel owned by Suminokura Yoichi, in the third year of the Kanyei era (1626). He stayed in Thailand for a year, and again, in the seventh year of the Kanyei era (1630), took passage to Thailand aboard a Dutch vessel commanded by Jean Yusten. In the fourth year of the Hoyei era (1707), when he was 96 years old, he wrote his reminiscences and presented the magistrate of Nagasaki with a copy of his book, which was popularly known as Tenjiku Tokubei's Story. This book contains a graphic account of Yamada Nagamasa's exploits. Dramatic accounts of Nagamasa's life are also given in The Climate and Military History of Thailand and The Biography of Yamada Nagamasa in Thailand, referred to above, and the popularity of Nagamasa has grown with the popularity of these books.

in Greater East Asia and recalling the peaceful and friendly spirit which prompted the conclusion of the aforementioned treaty between Japan and Thailand, has offered its mediation to the Governments of Thai and France with a view to bringing to an end the dispute between Thai and French Indo-China. It, therefore, proposes to the Government of Thai its plan of mediation, which is presented on separate sheets with confidence that it will be unconditionally accepted by the latter Government. The Japanese Government is prepared, upon its acceptance by the Thai Government, to guarantee to the Government of Thai that the settlement of the said dispute through the mediation plan submitted by it will be definitive and irrevocable.

"The Japanese Government, on the other hand, entertains no doubt that the Government of Thai, on its part, will endeavor for the maintenance of peace in Greater East Asia and especially for the establishment of good neighborly and amicable relations between Japan and Thai, as well as for the promotion of closer economic relations between Japan and Thai, and that it will declare to the Japanese Government that it will not enter into any ag eement or understanding with a third Power or Powers envisaging political, economic or military co-operation aimed either directly or indirectly against Japan.

"It is understood that this guarantee by the Japanese Government and the declaration of the Thai Government shall by formal documents be confirmed simultaneously with the conclusion of a treaty for the settlement of the dispute between Thai and France.

"I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to Your Highness the assurance of my highest consideration."

Sent to Arsene-Henry

Mr. Matsuoka's letter to the French delegate, Ambassador Charles Arsene-Henry, follows:

"Your Excellency,

"I have the honor to state that the Japanese Government, in view of the greatest importance which it attaches to the maintenance of peace in Greater East Asia, has been watching with concern the development of the dispute to which French Indo-China, whose special relations with Japan have grown still closer as a result of the agreement of the August 30, 1940, is a party against Thai.

"The Japanese Government, from the standpoint of the maintenance of peace in Greater East Asia and recalling the peaceful and friendly spirit which prompted the conclusion of the agreement between Japan and France, has offered its mediation to the Governments of France and Thai with a view to bringing to an end the dispute between French Indo-China and Thailand. It, therefore, proposes to the Government of France its plan of mediation, which is presented on separate sheets, with confidence that it will be unconditionally accepted by the latter Government. The Japanese Government is prepared, upon its acceptance by the French Government, to guarantee to the Government of France that the settlement of the said dispute through the mediation plan submitted by it will be definitive and irrevocable.

"The Japanese Government, on the other hand, entertains no doubt that the Government of France, on its part, will endeavor for the maintenance of peace in Greater East Asia and especially for the establishment of good neighborly and amicable relations between Japan and French Indo-China, as well as for the promotion of closer economic relations between Japan and French Indo-China, and that it will declare to the Japanese Government that it will not enter into any agreement or understanding with a third Power or Powers regarding French Indo-China envisaging political, economic or military co-operation aimed either directly or indirectly against Japan.

"It is understood that this guarantee by the Japanese Government and the declaration of the French Government shall by formal documents be confirmed simultaneously with the conclusion of a treaty for the settlement of the dispute between France and Thai.

"I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to Your Excellency the assurance of my highest consideration."

Prince Varavarn's letter to Mr. Matsuoka was as follows:

"Mr. Minister,

"By the letter under today's date, Your Excellency was good enough to inform me as follows: (text of the Japanese letter)

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of this letter and to inform Your Excellency that the Government of Thai is disposed, under the present situation, to accede to the instance of the Japanese Government, although it is not obliged to do so either from the standpoint of the local situation or from that of the fortune of arms. The Government of Thai, being constantly solicitous of the maintenance of peace in Greater East Asia, has never taken initiative of such a nature as of disturbing that peace, but testifies to its fidelity to the basic spirit which inspired the treaty of June 12, 1940, by accepting the mediation plan presented on separate sheets. On the basis of that spirit and being desirous of avoiding all kinds of engagements which will involve its country in a conflict between third Powers, the Government of Thai hereby declares that it has no intention of entering into any agreement or understanding with a third Power or Powers envisaging political, economic or military co-operation aimed either directly or indirectly against Japan. Moreover, it is expected by the Government of Thai that the Government of Japan will assure the strict observance of the treaty of June 12, 1940.

"I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to Your Excellency the assurance of my highest consideration."

Mr. Arsene-Henry's reply was as follows:

"By the letter under today's date, Your Excellency was good enough to inform me as follows: (text of the Japanese letter).

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of this letter and to inform Your Excellency that the Government of France is disposed, under the present situation, to accede to the instance of the Japanese Government, although it is not obliged to renounce the benefits of its treaties freely negotiated and concluded with the Government of Thai either from the standpoint of the local situation or from that of the fortune of arms. Manila Held Able To Stem Invasion for their strategic location. Special emphasis has been placed on training the men for immediate mobilization to resist enemy landing parties at any point.

The concentration of men is such that from a single barrio a platoon may be formed and several barrios when joined together will become a company or battalion. When the fighting units are assembled, the men from a military district form a combat division.

All of the men received intensive instruction in defensive tactics, concentrating principally on preventing formations of bridge-heads and also on semi-guerilla tactics to be followed in severing communication lines and breaking up concentrations in the event a landing proves successful.

The training of Filipinos has been such that the Philippines army can be swiftly incorporated into United States fighting units in the event of war. Key men have had instruction of one type or another under American officers, and many of the P.A. officers are West Point graduates. Under present plans, the U.S. army will proclaim martial law throughout the Philippines and will mobilize all fighting units under its command in the event of an invasion.

Should an overwhelming invasion force be thrown into the archipelago, present plans call for total defense of Corrigedor, the fortress guarding the entrance to Manila Bay. Here the army has concentrated its heaviest power with the aim of protecting American civilians and keeping the American flag still flying over the Philippines until reinforcements can be brought from Hawaii.

Facilities at Corrigedor are ample to feed and house the entire American community for at least six months. Coast artillery of sufficient power to keep enemy battleships at a distance have been emplaced there. Army officials make no attempt to conceal their pride in the accuracy of these units at a distance of from 20 to 25 miles.

To repulse an invasion from the rear, trench mortars have been emplaced in the deep ravines covering the "Rock" in such a manner that it is believed the mortars would be invulnerable to any air attack except by dive-bombers also 155-m.m. guns are emplaced in tunnels in the fortress covering both channels, and army officers claim their crews could easily pick off small craft. These guns are invulnerable to anything except straight-on shelling from a water area which they command.

The pride of the archipelago's defenses, however, are the 26 long-range naval bombers and the three pursuit squadrons of the army—which defense officials believe give the Philippines enough strength to ward off temporarily at least anything but a major invasion.

7 ABE BROTHERS TEACH FENCING AT CHINA FRONT

Experts in Sword Technique Plan to Establish School At Suchow

The seven Abe brothers of Yonezawa, Yamagata Prefecture, who are all holders of rank in Japanese style fencing and at present at the front, are planning to establish a fencing school at Suchow, North China, says the Hochi.

When Lieutenant Masao Abe, the sixth son, who is at present serving as an aide-de-camp at the headquarters of the Tanabe detachment at Suchow, met his two brothers, Lieutenant Giichi Abe and Sub-officer Chuzo Abe at the front, the brothers agreed on establishing a fencing school at Suchow on occasion of Lieutenant Masao Abe having been promoted from the fifth to the six rank in fencing. Sub-officer Chuzo Abe will return home in the near future to obtain the necessary fencing outfit.

Seventy-three-year old Mr. Toyokichi Abe, the grandfather of the seven fencing brothers, is the oldest community head in Yonezawa and also a fencing expert.

TRADING EXECUTIVE HAS STUDENT DORM

Privately-Operated International Hall Accommodates 20 Youths in Compound

Mr. Kametoshi Suzuki, president of the Bunka Trading Company, who took care of Mr. Eugen Hanisch, a Czechoslovak youth, for two years in his Tokyo home, has now completed a dormitory for foreign students in his residence compound at Arakicho, Yotsuya Ward, reports the Chugai.

Named International Hall, the dormitory has five Japanese and five western-style rooms, each accommodating two students, bathrooms and a large drawing-room, covering an area of 720 square yards. Mr. Suzuki was encouraged to build the dormitory by the success of exchanging sons with Mr. Hanisch's family in Prague. Mr. Hanisch returned home last April. Other foreign students are under paternal care of Mr. Suzuki at his home, says the Chugai.

Mr. Suzuki wishes to take care of boys and girls of the countries in the Co-prosperity Sphere in the Far East, including Manchoukuo, China and Thai. Mr. Wan I-tang, head of the North China Political Affairs Commission, was approached by Mr. Suzuki to recommend suitable Manchurian students.

Students in the International Hall will be helped in their studies by the Waseda International School and other institutions, and teachers of the Women's Literary College which Mr. Suzuki runs. Girl students will be given lessons in flower arrangement, Japanese dancing, koto music, tea ceremony and other Japanese arts.

In Mr. Suzuki's opinion, the best way to acquaint foreigners with Japan is to have them live in Japanese families.

He wishes to take care of youths of good families of Far Eastern countries who will be able to play leading roles in the Co-prosperity Sphere, according to the paper.

Tackles Dual Task

United Press

VICHY, March 10.—In a determined drive to give the lie to totalitarian assertions that the French race is tired and worn out, the government of Premier Marshal Henri Philippe Petain has energetically set about the dual task of giving French youth healthier bodies and a new set of ideals.

A recent law empowered the sports leader, Jean Borotra, France's former Davis Cup ace, to appropriate 1,900,000,000 francs for the building of stadiums and swimming pools and for the purchase of sporting material.

Meanwhile, the youth movement, characterized by the creation of work camps and workshops under the guidance of farmers, mechanics and skilled artisans, is being boosted with a gusto rarely hitherto seen in France. It is well known that the youth movement is Marshal Petain's chief preoccupation and he is probably more concerned with its success than many another matter of state.

Groups Are Growing

The Youth Movement (Movement de Jeunesse), which is under direct state control already groups more than 100,000 youngsters between the ages of 14 to 21, while the autonomous Companions of France (Compagnons de France) movement is steadily gaining ground and now has something in the neighborhood of 5,000 adherents.

The aims of the two groups are to eliminate juvenile unemployment, decongestion of overpopulated city slum areas by teaching the young people rural artisanship, and to instill nationalistic principles combined with greater discipline. Both boys and girls are included in the movement.

For the time being, the young people are being employed in doing work for which there is a dearth of adult labor so as not to take work away from their elders. They are paid 20 francs daily, most of which is made over directly to the parents for their upkeep and with the exception of those engaged in forestry, most of them live at home.

Companions Different

The Companions of France movement is slightly different from the Youth Movement in that children of any age are accepted and the organization is run very much along the lines of the Boy Scouts. It aims, as does the Youth Movement, at eliminating unemployment, but also puts great stress on games as a medium of molding character, toughening the body and installing into the youthful mind the necessity of maintaining throughout life that "team spirit" which, calling for the submission of personal desires in the interests of the group, runs somewhat counter to the traditionally individualistic French way of thinking. The French press is daily insistent on the fact that as far as this country is concerned "every man for himself" is a thing of the past and must be definitely stamped out. The Companions of France organization is financed by the State.

The French Government's interest in youth is not confined to these movements and during recent months a veritable revolution has taken place in the teaching world. Teachers and professors throughout France who were considered as being too much in sympathy with prewar Popular Front ideas were either retired or fired out of hand. Several notoriously "Leftist" professors from some of France's universities were deprived of their French citizenship.

With regard to this phase of reeducation, the monthly bulletin published by the General Youth Commissariat recently made the following remarks:

Education Reformed

"The Marshal said: 'Among the tasks facing the Government there is none more important than the reform of national education.'

"A month later this task was accomplished. The reform is of exceptional scope, directly interested in recruiting of teachers as well as the organization of school curriculums. The Marshal knows what influence is exercised during life by the principles and education received at school and at home. He aims at creating the unity of inspiration throughout the whole of the teaching profession. The Government of the Marshal is engaged in recruiting for France new servants and is furnishing them with new methods."

The modifications brought about in the recruiting for teachers aim at "eliminating amateurs and bad or incapable guides," according to this publication.

The goal of the newly established curriculums was officially stated to be the following:

"To give school children a certain discipline of thought, to develop the spirit of synthesis as well as that of analysis and to teach them to think clearly. More importance will be attached to forming their intelligence than in pumping a thousand and one things into their heads which call more for an effort of memory than of reflection."

Changes Made

It is interesting to note that paragraph No. 1 of the history teachers' guide said that "This branch of teaching will be built around pictures, scenes and events specially chosen to strike the child's imagination. There must be nothing abstract. Some dates must be learned as sign-posts of history etc."

Paragraph No. 1 of the new guide simply states: "The generalized history of France particularly since Henry IV. Stress will be laid on the continuity of French endeavor throughout all regimes toward the building up, the maintenance and the reconstruction of France."

This corresponds to the Marshal's idea when he recently declared:

"The French school of tomorrow will teach the meaning of respect for humanity, the respect of the family, society and the Fatherland. Schools will no longer strive after neutrality. Life is not neutral. It consists in taking hardy steps forward."

Dovetailing into this line of thought is the guiding slogan of the youth movements which proclaim that the family is a social cell on which "New France" is to be built.

The motto of the Companions of France is: "You shall be courteous to women. You shall respect your family."

In answer to the government's appeals municipalities throughout France are donating fields and gardens where members of the youth movements can experiment and learn their future profession, while many disused farms have been handed over to them where they are working under the leadership of practical farmers.

Minister Sets Example

Education Minister Kunihiko Hashida, center in national uniform, sets an example in the campaign to promote walking as an exercise among the people by going for a stroll in the outer gardens of the Meiji Shrine.

RETAIN GRACE OF KIMONO

Should Be Preserved in New Women's National Uniforms, Hochi Says

The Hochi hopes that the grace of the kimono will be preserved in the national uniform which the Welfare Ministry plans to institute for Japanese women

Since the women's national uniform must be hygienic, the obi, or sash, which obstructs the development of the chest must be abolished. Neither must the uniform be so long as to handicap the movement of the legs because it should be worn for air defense drills and other activities.

But utility alone should not be considered. It should retain the grace of the old kimono in design, colors and patterns, the paper says.

Clouds Blot Eclipse

Cloudy weather made it impossible for Tokyo residents to witness a partial eclipse of the moon from 7:55 to 9:55 o'clock last night. Beginning at a upper-left point of the satellite, the eclipse would have been seen at its maximum around 8:55 o'clock. Another lunar eclipse will be observable in Japan on September 6, according to the Chugai.

DEFENSE ORDERS IN U.S. ARE TIED UP BY STRIKES

28 Plants Affected, Involving Nearly $100,000,000 Worth Of Production

Domei

NEW YORK, March 12.—Another strike tied up more defense production orders in the United States yesterday.

Seventeen hundred workers of the Midland Steel Products Company in Detroit struck and halted production on materials used by three of the largest automobile companies for defense purposes.

Meanwhile, the United Automobile Workers Union demanded pay increases and elimination of piece work.

Strikes generally are progressing in 28 plants involving almost $100,000,000 worth of defense orders.

The coal industry also was threatened with trouble when Mr. John L. Lewis, President of the United Mine Workers of America, presented a demand for a one dollar a day wage increase for 380,000 members employed in the Appalachian soft coal industry.

Mr. Lewis also demanded a new two-year wage and hour contract to replace the pact expiring April 1, and also proposed that the present 35-hours work be "conceded and extended."

Mr. Lewis asked for an absolute basic minimum wage of six dollars a day "without exception."

Under the new structure, the military forces under the direct command of the Military Affairs Commission of the National Government comprise 10 Divisions, five Independent Brigades, three Independent Groups, and 30,000 troops of the First Group under the command of General Li Chang-kiang, who sometime ago joined the peace camp, besides the Kiangsu-Chekiang Pacification Army, which was transferred from the former Renovation Government and which is now called the First District Army under the command of General Jen Yuan-tao.

PAPER LAUDS STAND OF FRENCH CAPTAIN

Asahi Predicts Great Role For Rene Juan in Future Asiatic Relations

Highly praising the ability of Captain Rene Juan, chief of the military secretariat of the Hanoi Government-General, who aided negotiations at Hanoi between Japanese and French Indo-China authorities regarding the Thai border dispute, the Asahi says that great will be the role of the Captain in promoting friendship between Japan and French Indo-China.

"With the successful conclusion of the Tokyo peace conference between Thai and French Indo-China, French people here in Japan seem greatly pleased," says the paper, "but more happy must be the representatives of French Indo-China who negotiated at Hanoi with the delegates of the Japanese Empire. Captain Rene Juan is the person we think of, in this sense.

"It is recailed that the Japanese mediation in the dispute between Thai and French Indo-China was launched January 22 when Colonel Koike, a member of the Japanese military mission to Hanoi, called on the director of the General Affairs Board of the French Indo-China Government-General to announce the intention of the Japanese Empire on this point.

Captain Intervenes

"Colonel Koike's visit was not successful. On the following day, January 23, Captain Juan flew from Saigon as a special envoy of French Indo-China Governor-General Jean Decoux, and a meeting took place with Colonel Koike which resulted in the formal Japanese proposal to the Hanoi authorities to mediate the border dispute.

"The stage then moved to Saigon, where Major-General Raishiro Sumita, head of the Japanese military mission to French Indo-China, and members of his suite proceeded January 28.

"With the signing of the truce between Thai and French Indo-China January 31, the stage moved to Tokyo.

"During that period, Captain Juan was remarkably active in negotiations with the Japanese representatives. In the Saigon truce conference he acted as the representative of the Hanoi Government-General. Even after the conference he successfully effected the truce pact, in close liaison with Major-General Sumita.

Leads Colony Policy

"Despite the unfavorable atmosphere in French Indo-China as rumors circulated that the future of the Tokyo conference would be dark, he successfully led the people of the French colony.

"Captain Juan is one of the most excellent persons in Hanoi and Governor-General Decoux trusts him as a right-hand man.

"He has had a fine career as a naval officer. He served in the first European war, commanding a torpedo fleet in the Mediterranean. After working with the French naval general staff and in the Navy Ministry, he was appointed to French Indo-China as the chief of the general staff of the French fleet in the colony in 1934.

"With the appointment of Vice-Admiral Decoux as the Governor-General of Indo-China, Captain Juan became the chief of the military secretariat.

"He is now 46 years old, and can speak English and German. He has published many books, among which is a history of the French navy.

"He said that the success of the Tokyo conference is due to the sincerity of the Japanese Government. He also said that he will heartily co-operate with Japan for mutual prosperity."

TASS NOTES VISIT BRIEFLY

Soviet Agency Says Nothing on Moscow Reception to Matsuoka

Domei

MOSCOW, March 12.—Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka's departure from Tokyo tonight for visits to Moscow, Berlin and Rome was briefly reported by Tass news agency with no mention of the reception Moscow is likely to accord the Japanese Minister on his arrival.

The Red Star, organ of the Soviet Army, meanwhile published an editorial expressing its opinion that the international tension in southeastern Asia has not been relieved by the success of Japanese mediation in the Thailand-French Indo-China dispute.

LONDONERS' EATING IS TRYING BUSINESS

Famous Juicy Beefsteaks, Roast Beef and Lamb Becoming Almost a Memory

I.N.S.

LONDON, March 2.—Eating, once a very pleasant pastime in London, is today becoming a very trying and expensive business.

Those fine juicy beefsteaks, the mouth-watering cuts of excellent roast beef, and the nostril-itching portions of roast lamb, with accompanying lashing of red-currant jelly or onion sauce, for which peacetime London was famous, are becoming almost a memory.

With butter as precious as water in the Sahara, cheese becoming more scarce every day, lemons and onions as priceless as old lace, and portions becoming smaller as they rise in price, it is small wonder that the few Americans still left in this town gaze with envy at the highly decorative and tempting food ads in incoming American magazines.

It has taken nearly 18 months of war to force severe food rationing on this bomb-scarred city. And it has come so suddenly that it hurts. Particularly does it hurt those who, because of force of circumstances, are compelled to eat away from home, who, because they have been able to obtain the best the restaurants hitherto have been able to offer, haven't especially been affected by rationing.

Sandwich Sought

It hurts in odd little ways. Today, for example, the writer wanted a sandwich. Not the luscious, thick triple-decker of peacetime days, with its toasted bread, plentitude of meat, vegetables and dressing, but the anemic wartime substitute, with its grayish-looking bread and thin "ham."

The copy-boy returned after a tour of the local pubs and eating houses, empty-handed. Someone in the office remembered a small pub tucked away in an obscure back-alley, once famous for its cold viands. The copy boy was dispatched, hot foot, only to return after a while, to say:

"Please sir, they can only let you have a sandwich if you will provide your own wrapping paper."

Again, a few nights ago, the writer went to his favorite Fleet Street eating-house, where he has been a customer for more years than he cares to remember, and where hitherto it has been possible to get a four or five course meal, a la carte.

Menu Limited

"No printed menu tonight, sir," said the waiter, mournfully. "Just two dishes, soup and chicken. No hors d'oeuvres, no dessert."

The writer had his two dishes, still felt a mite hungry. "Any cheese?" he asked, hopefully. "Sorry, no cheese," said the waiter. "A little celery and a piece of bread?" murmured the writer, tentatively. "Very sorry, sir," said the waiter, "but just two dishes, and you have had them."

The second shock came when the time came to pay the bill. It was just slightly more than the price for the usual full dinner.

Cause of the changed condition is two-fold. In the main, it is due to severer rationing conditions. A secondary cause is that the Ministry of Food, appalled at stories of over-eating in restaurants, at reports of gourmets getting their oysters, their caviar, their lashings of ham and eggs, with little or no respect to rationing orders, have tightened up on restaurant eating and restricted menus to one main dish and minor trimmings.

Like every other wartime order, however, it has hurt the gourmet and the disciplined eater alike. The man or woman forced to eat in restaurants is having a thin time, and is likely to have even a thinner time as this war proceeds.

Summer may find some of them bringing their lunch-baskets to the office.

CANADIANS PLAYING MAJOR ROLE IN WAR

Most Vital Contribution Is Training of Pilots for Royal Air Force

I.N.S.

NEW YORK, February 20.—Canada is playing a vital and surprisingly varied role in the war effort of the British Commonwealth, a survey by the British Press Service has revealed.

Besides being a great storehouse for food and raw materials, Canada can boast a growing industry for the machines of war and, a full fledged nation, can put in the field a full roster of armed forces. The Canadians have their own air force, their own navy and an army which is now being largely trained and equipped within their own borders. Even more important, all services are in a fair way to being served by a domestic armaments industry which makes them in many respects independent of Great Britain.

The Empire training program is probably Canada's most significant contribution to the Commonwealth war organization. This program, whereby fliers are being trained for the growing air armadas, is also shared with Australia and New Zealand, but the brunt, both of cost and of organization, is borne by Canada. According to a high Canadian official, Canada is contributing $360,000,000 of a total cost of $600,000,000. Thirty six thousand pilots, observers, gunners, ground crews, are now training under the plan in Canada. About seven per cent of the men who fly—the pilots, observers and gunners—are U. S. citizens and the rest Canadians, French Canadians, Scots, Irish, British, Australians.

Trained Air Personnel

According to the same source, by the end of this year Canada will be sending airmen to Britain "by tens of thousands." Fifty flying schools are now in operation and the program will finally have 83. The fall of France resulted in a speeding up of the schedule so that all airfields, hangars and school bulidings scheduled for 1941 were to have been completed by the end of 1940. The plan calls for 67 training schools and 16 supplementary schools with 88 airfields of which 60 are new. The program is already turning out graduates. On December 26, the first contingent of Australian graduates who finished their training in Canada, and the third contingent of Canadians, arrived in London ready for active service.

The Royal Canadian Air Force is separate from the Empire training program although fed by it. Expanding rapidly since the outbreak of war, it consisted on January 1, 1941 of more than 40,000 men. Three squadrons of the R. C. A. F. are in Britain and in December had brought down 71 enemy planes. Besides this, however, there are over 1,000 Canadians serving in the R. A. F. which boasts one all-Canadian squadron.

U.S. Planes Used

No air force or training scheme could function without the backing of an aircraft industry. In the first months of the war the Canadians relied on Great Britain to supply them, but after the fall of France when shipments were suspended they turned for help to the United States. In consequence much of the training work is done in planes manufactured in the United States, such as the North American "Harvards." In October alone 102 planes were shipped from the United States to Canada. But beside this help from south of the border Canada is developing its own aircraft industry. Although aircraft production figures are not available, it is known that the Canadian built "Hurricane" fighters arrived in England as long ago as February of last year. Hampden bombers are also being built in the Dominion. The output of planes is expected to reach about 360 a month early this year.

According to the latest official figures the Canadian army has between 50,000 and 60,000 men overseas. Two divisions are serving in Britain and there are detachments in Iceland, Bermuda and the West Indies. A Third and Fourth Division are now virtually ready and are bing trained and equipped entirely within Canada's own borders with the latest mechanized equipment. Altogether the Canadian army comprises 167,000 men with a reserve of 100,000 now increasing at the rate of 30,000 a month.

Training under the National Registration Scheme of the Non-Permanent Active Militia began on October 1st with single men 21 years old. Training lasts 30 days and will involve 300,000 men the first year. Although all men between 21 and 45 are liable for training those working in essential industries will be spared.

The Candaian armaments industry is expanding to meet the requirements of this modern army. After the fall of France three government-owned, non-profit-making organizations were established to facilitate production and during the last months of 1940, fifty factories were being expanded to turn out $400,030,000 worth of munitions. All industrial, shipbuilding and aircraft firms are working day and night, Sundays and holidays.

EIGHT-ROUND BOUT TOPS FIGHT PROGRAM TUESDAY

Slugger Isagawa, Kobe Sailor, Will Meet Master Boxer, Veteran Kushihashi

An eight-round bout between Slugger Isagawa and Toshimitsu Kushihashi will top the weekly fight program Tuesday night at Hibiya Public Hall. Two other eight-rounders, three of six rounds and the usual preliminary bouts will fill out an attractive card which is slated to start at 5:30 o'clock.

The feature bout will pit a slugger against a master boxer. Slugger Isagawa, the Kobe sailor never fails to swing away from the opening bell and is a crowd pleaser. Kushihashi, on the other hand, is a ring-wise veteran of the local Fujii Club who is fast with both fists and a stylist, who combines a great deal of boxing skill with fast counter-punching. An interesting match is expected to result.

One of the other two eight-round bouts will have Kid Sauda who recently drew with Piston Horiguchi in Nagoya, fighting Kazuo Ishida, another Fujii Club boy. Ishida a strong aggressive young boxer is counted to offer the Kid plenty of opposition. The last of the eight-rounders has Tomio Nakamura, up-an-coming little fighter of the Usuda Club, meeting Aijiro Yajima.

The six-round bouts, three in number, are lined up as follows: Yoshida vs Sawada; Sakairi vs Hanada and Akiyama vs Okuyama.

BRITISH WAR WOMEN NEAR MILLION MARK

Feminine Workers Take Places Behind Front to Help National Effort

I.N.S.

LONDON, March 1.—Britain's great army of women war workers is today rapidly nearing the million mark demanded by Prime Minister Winston Churchill in his recent appeal for women to join the British war effort.

A canvass of the numerous women's war organizations revealed that in recent weeks thousands of additional women have lined themselves up behind the fighting men and have taken their places at the factory bench and the plow and in the "front line" with the Civil Defense forces.

Women have flocked to the war factories, despite the exhausting physical effort demanded of them, the double shifts that are being worked, and the often monotonous routine of sitting at factory benches counting bolts and nuts or assembling machinery. All have undergone special training.

Civil Defense Volunteers

The Women's Voluntary Services for Civil Defense have had their numbers increased to over 700,000 by women who, unable to give all their time, are contributing their part-time services, unpaid, to act as sort of "Fairy Godmothers" to the various Forces. At 1,370 centers, these women to everything, from serving thousands of meals to darning 302,000 pairs of socks a week, to help the fighting men.

Ten thousand girls are engaged on the land, tractor driving, plowing, milking, and doing forestry work. Known as the Women's Land Army, they are the huskies of the feminine side of this war and are gaining plaudits from farmers.

The Women's Auxiliary Fire Service has added thousands of new recruits to its rolls in recent weeks. In London alone today there are 2,300 telephonists and watch-room attendants, 200 drivers, and 60 officers, assisting the regular and auxiliary fire services. Male fire-chiefs have declared that since the Luftwaffe fire-bugs turned their attention to London, these girls have been of untold assistance.

Three thousand women in London alone have answered the call for women bus conductors and subway station porters. Hundreds more are being enrolled every week, as bus companies, subway concerns and even the main line railroads lose more men to the armed forces and increase the number of women employes. Many railroadmen's wives are doing jobs former'y done by their husbands.

Women Ambulance Drivers

There are now nearly 130,000 women doing splendid service as ambulance drivers, first-aid workers, and ARP wardens throughout Britain. They have displayed tremendous courage during air raids.

Even the Girl Guides have turned to war work. A quarter of a million girls are acting as messengers, canteen attendants, knitters, and kitchen garden holders throughout the country.

The Women's Auxiliary Air Force now numbers approximately 12,000 women, who fulfill a wonderful variety of tasks ranging from motor-driving, secretarial duties, highly technical work on aircraft, to mending rents in barrage balloons.

Narly 11,000 officers and ratings of the Women's Royal Naval Service are carrying out an immense variety of important short work. Secretarial, transport driving, cooking, map drawing, radio operating are only a few of the jobs in which they have freed men for more active and more dangerous work.

Over 35,000 women and girls are now in the Women's Auxiliary Territorial Service. They come from all ranks in life and from a wide variety of callings, and have replaced soldiers in such duties as motor driving, clerical work, cooking, storekeeping, orderly work, stenography, and officers' servants.

LATER CURFEW SCHEDULED

Authorities Will Revert to 10 o'Clock Closing Times in April

Stores in all cities of Japan will again observe a 10 o'clock curfew beginning April 1, as the temporary notification for a 9 o'clock closing time expires at the end of this month, according to Domei.

The authorities, who had considered the early closing time beneficial for the health of employes and for electric power conservation, decided recently to return to the former time limit in view of the public opinion favoring it, at least during spring, summer and autumn, explains the news agency.

AUSTRALIA FEELING BETTERS FOR JAPAN

Returning Captain Reports Sentiment in Commonwealth Growing More Kindly

The general feeling of the people of Australia is far from being hostile, and the exchange of Ministers with Japan has made the feeling still better, in the opinion of Mr. Shogo Okubo, captain of the 8,000-ton N.Y.K. liner Atsuta Maru which arrived in Yokohama from Australia yesterday afternoon.

When interviewed by a reporter of the Japan Times and Advertiser on board ship in Yokohama harbor, Captain Okubo said he had experienced one of the most cordial receptions in Australia on this voyage, his 12th time in that country as captain of a Japanese ship.

It is true, he continued, that Japanese ships on previous occasions have had some uncomfortable experiences in dealing with British authorities, but it cannot be denied that British officials are trying to be as accommodating and nice to the Japanese as possible. With regard to official negotiations concerning the loading of foodstuffs and cargo, the British officials were as courteous as anyone could be, continued the captain.

Food Is Plentiful

Asked about the general situation in Australia, Captain Okubo said there are restrictions on the export of various raw products such as cotton and wheat, and also on wine which is abundantly produced in that country, but in regard to essential foodstuffs there is no scarcity whatsoever. The captain said that the life of the people in Australia is absolutely normal, and in their attitude toward the European war, and particularly toward Far Eastern problems, they are exceedingly optimistic.

Further questioned about the effect of the European war on Australia, Captain Okubo said that armament factories are being built one after the other, and the industrial output of armaments is increasing tremendously. Furthermore, he said, the training of pilots is one of the most important activities being carried on by the Australian army. Because the entire population of Australia, about the same as that of Tokyo, is so small the greatest contribution the Commonwealth can offer to the cause of Great Britain is to produce the greatest number of air pilots.

However, Captain Okubo said from what he heard on his recent voyage most of the British soldiers in Libya and Somaliland were Australians, and they seemed to be "an exceedingly tough bunch of fellows."

Still Hold Seas

Questioned as to what the Australian papers reported of the war in Europe, the captain said that Great Britain was "doing pretty well" according to what is told the people there. He said that it cannot be denied that the British still hold their own on the sea, and they are "definitely conscious of their superiority." The long traditional superiority which the British have held on the sea, he continued, seemed to make them confident of final victory.

Questioned in regard to the many Italians in Australia, Catain Okubo said that many of them are working on sugar plantations, quite content to stay there, but many others were being sent back to their country by the Commonwealth government.

In concluding, Captain Okubo said that in regard to relations between Australia and Japan, there is absolutely no need to be pessimistic, from what he heard while there, and particularly after the exchange of Ministers the situation seemed to be turning from not-so-bad to better.

Industrial Reorganization

It is reported that Commerce and Industry Minister Ichizo Kobayashi is now in conflict with officials of his Ministry in regard to the policy of reorganizing industrial bodies according to Article 18 of the revised National General Mobilization Law.

Minister Kobayashi intends to take a step to promulgate Imperial ordinances according to Article 18 of the Mobilization Law for individual branches of industries, while officials of his Ministry hold that one Imperial Ordinance should be promulgated according to the same law to govern all key industries to give the basis of reorganization of industrial bodies.

Though it cannot be foreseen which way will cause chaos in industrial circles, it must be borne in mind that such conflict is the very cause of chaos in industrial circles.

New Officialdom Structure

Although it is not made known as to what extent the plan for establishment of the new officialdom structure has been materialized, demands from financial and business circles for reform of the administrative mechanisms are still strong.

For instance, manufacturers of iron and steel urge the need of unifying control and orders by the competent authorities over the supply and transportation of iron ore and coal as a means to expand the capacity of production of iron and steel.

No matter how earnest private companies may be, plans for increase of production cannot be realized if they are distorted by special conditions existing in competent Ministries.

It may perhaps not be an easy task to correct the existing defects in the administrative mechanisms, but steps should be taken to reform what is required to be reformed, immediately.

Absorption of National Bonds

The Government plans to issue national bonds amounting to ¥7,500,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1941-42, an increase of ¥1,500,000,000 over the current fiscal year of 1940-41. Smooth absorption of the national bonds is a big problem imposed upon financial circles. Though individuals are advised by the Government to keep national bonds as much as possible, it is evident that much cannot be expected from the holding of national bonds by individuals. The success of the absorption of national bonds amounting to a huge sum is dependent upon the capacity of absorption by banking institutions.

We hope that all the latter will cooperate with the Government in absorbing national bonds so that they may not be accused of having a small amount of national bonds.

Photos to Be Sent to Indo-China

A collection of mounted photographs to be sent to French Indo-China by the War Ministry were put on exhibition in the compound of the Ministry yesterday. Colonel Hayao Mabuchi, in charge of the army press section of Imperial Headquarters, inspected the pictures before sending them on their way.

Cuban Crisis Settled Without Bloodshed

mission is now in Cuba looking into the possibilities of crop diversification with a view to emancipating Cuba, in the long run, from the curse of single-crop agricultural economy.

A loan of $50,000,000 is also under consideration. When Colonel Batista returned to Havana after a visit to Washington before he became President, he announced that such a loan had been consummated. The Cuban Congress had authorized it and had specified the objects to which its proceeds were to be devoted. Only the Export-Import Bank was unconvinced.

There was primarily the question of the stability of the Batista regime, and this seems to have been resolved in its favor. In Cuba, since the downfall of President Machado, there has been a tendency of Presidents to come and to go in relatively unpredictable manner, and each newcomer would be inclined to doubt the validity of debts contracted by his predecessor.

Rumors of Dissatisfaction

A certain color was lent to these doubts of permanence by persistent reports of widespread dissatisfaction among the conservative and monied elements of the population over the increasing arrogance and even depredations of the military.

In addition, there were the usual doubts which have to be resolved regarding all Pan-American economic defense measures which depend, in the final analysis, on North American gold for their immediate solution. Cuban sugar growers will presumably have to cut their production, because it cannot be sold, and go to other lines of agricultural endeavor.

This is hard enough to solve, and finance, but it was complicated in Cuba by the clash of interest between the growers, who are mostly Cubans, and the processors, who are mostly North Americans. How to lend all enough money to tide them through the difficulties of the next few years has been too great a problem for solution thus far.

Spending Programs Of Lease-Lend Bill To Shatter Record

political reward. The White House has always been very free with these in the past, and a good many men around the President, unprepared for the passive abandonment of such useful weapons, were rather laughably disturbed by it. Their reaction was nicely expressed by an over-excitable New Dealer, who asked, somewhat plaintively, "Why in God's name don't they trot out the judgeships?"

Even now, while people not in the Government should be rejoiced by the President's altered ways, there are plenty of influential Administration personages who are frankly depressed.

The most important episode preceding the lease-lend fight in the House was the bi-partisan conference on the bill called by the President at the suggestion of Speaker Rayburn. During this conference, House Republican leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr., asked the President what the aims of the bill were. The President replied simply, "The aim is to help the British to whip Hitler." He added that if Congress would give him sufficient authority for this purpose, he was "perfectly willing" to accept any amendments the members of Congress thought desirable.

McNary as Peacemaker

It was this response of the Presidents that so deeply impressed the wise chieftain of the Senate Republicans, Mr. Charles L. McNary, who subsequently used all his powerful influence to prevent the fight from becoming too embittered. It was also this response that Mr. Rayburn and his lieutenants took as their charter of action in the House.

Before the President's bi-partisan conference Mr. Rayburn had worked out with Secretary of State Cordell Hull the three amendments proposed and generally approved by the conferences. These amendments, to avoid any authorization of convoys, to put a time limit on the bill and to require trimonthly reports to Congress, were adopted in the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Then when the bill came to the floor, a sort of special steering committee was formed, including Mr. Rayburn and the House Democratic leader, Mr. John W. McCormack; the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. Sol Bloom; the committee member who did most of the real work, Representative Luther A. Johnson, and several others. This committee met every morning to consider the program for the day's session.

As has been said already, the committee reached its decisions on its own hook, so far as the President was concerned. Liaisons were maintained, however, with Representative James Wadsworth and the other House Republicans in favor of aid to Britain, and with Senator Walter F. George and the other Senate managers of the bill. The most controversal amendment approved by the steering committee, to limit the value of existing war material to be transferred under the bill to $1,300,000,000, originated simultaneously in both House and Senate. There was feeling for something of the sort in the House. At the other end of the Capitol the Senate managers became aware that Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg and several other isolationists proposed to charge the President with asking power "to give away the navy." The amendment cheating the Michigan Senator of his oration was a joint House and Senate product.

Although the leadership slipped on the Dirksen amendment permitting repeal of the bill by concurrent resolution, the results of the House debate and voting were eminently satisfactory. The bill was passed by a large majority, in effective form. The President was delighted, and telephoned Mr. Rayburn and his co-workers to offer his hearty congratulations. And the House members themselves, having been encouraged to shape the bill to their own desires, were as pleased as the President. Had they been dragooned and restricted, the vote might have been even larger, and the amendments even more slight. But as it is, the Congressional atmosphere is pleasant and healthy. In short, the President obliged the Congressional leaders by changing his ways. He has also served his own interests.

targets at the mouth of the Elbe and among oil storage plants at Rotterdam. The attacks on Emden and Bremen were of a minor character.

The Aircraft Coastal Command also scored a hit on the stern of an enemy supply vessel off Norway.

It is learned that last night's attack on Hamburg was the heaviest yet made. Heavy bombs fell on shipbuilding, dockyards and warehouses and the damage done to these objectives which had already been severely bombed only 24 hours before is believed to be considerable.

German raiders are reported to be over many parts of Britain tonight.

Valona Is Attacked

I.N.S.

ROME, March 14.—The official bulletin announces that enemy torpedo planes attacked Italian vessels yesterday in the harbor of Valona, when one Italian merchantman was damaged, while two enemy planes were shot down and the crews taken prisoner.

On the night of March 12 German planes attacked enemy air and naval bases in the Marmarica area, when airplanes on the ground, motor units and military works were destroyed.

Enemy planes bombed Tripoli and did some slight damage, and Italian planes bombed Crete air and naval bases.

British incendiary and high explosive bombs were dropped on the villages of Rhodes and a convent, but only slight damage was done.

An enemy attack at Keren in Eritrea was repulsed, while in Upper Sudan Italian planes bombed troops and mechanized units.

German Strength Gauged

Domei

LONDON, March 14.—Germany's current fleet of first-line planes comprises approximately 4,250 machines, according to calculation by the observer's air correspondent.

He says these planes include 1,600 long-range bombers, 750 dive-bombers, 1,500 fighters and 400 reconnaissance planes. Other British sources claiming access to reliable data estimate the strength of the German air arm as possessing between 5,000 and 6,000 first-line warplanes.

The Secretary for Air, Sir Archibald Sinclair, recently announced that British losses to date in the air since the war started were roughly 1,800 planes against German losses of 4,250 planes and Italian losses of approximately 1,000 planes.

LONGTIME RESIDENT SAILS FOR AMERICA

Mrs. Zoe Penlington, Veteran Of English Journalism In Japan, Leaves

Mrs. Zoe Kincaid Penlington, who has been associated with English journalism in Japan for more than 30 years, is sailing from Yokohama for the United States on board the N.Y.K. liner Hie Maru, today.

Mrs. Penlington is also well known for her book, Kabuki, which is without a doubt the finest thing ever written on the history of the Kabuki Theater, the really only National Theater.

Mrs. Penlington, then Miss Zoe Kincaid, first came to Japan in 1908 as a tourist intending to return to the United States after a short visit here. However, she changed her plans and remained to become editor of the first illustrated weekly magazine in Tokyo, the Japan Magazine. In 1910 she became engaged to Mr. John N. Penlington, who had come to Japan in 1902 from England at the invitation of the Kobe Chronicle. After a short trip to the United States, Miss Kincaid returned to Japan and married Mr. Penlington in the fall of 1910.

In 1912, Mr. and Mrs. Penlington started a weekly publication called the Far East, a pioneer weekly in Japan, which they continued to publish for 12 years. Their whole plant was destroyed in the Great Earthquake of 1923 and for various reasons was not rebuilt.

Mr. Penlington was the first editor of The Japan Advertiser in Tokyo, a position which he held for about three years. He was also representative in Japan for the Daily Mail and The Times of London, interpreting news of Japan abroad for 30 years. Mrs. Penington speaks of him as "a modest gentleman."

When traveling in Manchoukuo in 1932, on the way from Hsinking to Harbin, his train was attacked by bandits. As a result of exposure his lungs were weakened and in March, 1933, he died of pneumonia after only a three days' illness.

Mrs. Penlington assisted her husband in his foreign correspondence work. She became interested in the Kabuki theater and spent ten years in the preparation and writing of her famous book. She also wrote for the London Illustrated News, for the Sphere and other British and American papers and magazines. She has also done considerable lecturing in London, New York, San Francisco and other cities. In 1936 she gave a series of lectures at the summer school of the University of Washington, her alma mater.

Mrs. Penlington said, when asked about leaving Japan at this time, "I am returning to the States to lecture and to engage in literary work and expect to be back in Japan in about a year."

She will make her home with her brother, Dr. Trevor Kincaid, head of the department of zoology at the University of Washington. Her address will be 1904 East 52nd Street, Seattle, Washington.

LONDON PRESS AT PLAY

Metropolitan Papers Turn to Facetiousness to Allay Tension

Domei

LONDON, March 13.—The average Londoner who has little to laugh about these days probably gets a bigger chuckle out of his daily newspapers now than ever before. Today's Daily Mail pictures an Eskimo perched atop an igloo and a neighbor observing "he wouldn't mind the fire watching if the nights were a few months shorter." This spirit is carried over into the advertisements and competing ads of Bovril and Oxo show rival "beef eaters with steaming cups" and blitzed surroundings.

The Spratly Islands

The Japanese Government under date of April 18, 1939, made its territorial claim to the Spratly Islands. The claim was made on the ground that the islands had been first discovered by Japanese subjects and that Japanese industrial interests have been operating guano deposits there since several years ago. Annexed to the Japanese empire in such circumstances, the group of islands until then vaguely known as the Spratly Islands was now renamed Shin Nan Gunto—the New Southern Islands, and their exact positions were specified. But beyond that, little information was given as to the background or circumstances leading to the annexation. Moreover, the little information given out at the time was misleading in some points.

According to that information, the Spratly Islands were first discovered by a Japanese subject named Suejl Hirata in March 1917 and that in May of the same year two Japanese named Shigetoshi Komatsu and Kinzo Ikeda discovered the islands and continued to explore them for some four months, the latter being mentioned as the first ever to explore the islands.

On the basis of their exploration an application was filed with the Foreign Ministry under date of October 7, 1918, for the addition of the islands to the territory of Japan. It is further stated that "from December 1918 the Rasa Rinko (Phosphate Mining) Company began its exploration of the islands and continued to do so up to January of the following year, putting up posts to mark them as Japanese territory."

From the above account it appears that the first explorers of the islands were two Japanese who had preceded the Rasa Rinko Company. But from what has been later brought to light it seems very doubtful and uncertain how far their exploration went. No authentic account concerning the exploration in those islands appeared until December 1940 when the posthumous work of Commander Unosuke Ogura, of the Imperial Navy, was issued under the title of "Bofuno Shima"—the Storm Island, the name by which one of the group has been known for years. This author writes that the islands had never been explored until he went out there in 1918, and his claim is supported by Captain Kotoku Mizuno, retired, of the Navy, who is a well-known writer on naval subjects and contributes an introduction to his late classmate's book.

It seems not improbable that some of the accounts brought in before Commander Ogura's expedition were not quite true or accurate and claims may have been advanced on uncertain grounds. This seems even more probable when it is known that waters close to the west of the Palawan Passage, unexplored except for some individual islands or reefs, and marked as a danger zone to be avoided by the mariners, had been the scene of many wrecks whose survivors were not accurate in surveying the surroundings in which they found themselves. They might have taken a few islands or reefs for the whole archipelago for the simple reason that they had no knowledge of any others.

The late Commander Ogura's expedition to the south was undertaken under quite fortuitous circumstances. Mr. Noritaka Tsuneto, chairman of the Rasa Rinko Company, was one day called on by a stranger who offered to sell the rights of mining phosphate rock located "at a certain point in the China Sea." The company was interested but naturally wished to know where the place was, but the stranger would not disclose the location and went away.

Mr. Tsuneto whose interest had been stimulated by the stranger whose identity was never to be established decided to undertake an expedition on his company's account. He thought he would rather lose money in that way than be duped by any stranger. He applied to the Navy Ministry to recommend a proper man. Commander Ogura who had just retired from active service for health reasons was recommended through Commander Seizo Kobayashi, who was then an adjutant to the Minister, and who, two decades later, as Governor-General of Formosa, was to declare in his name the annexation of the islands where the expedition was to be sent.

Commander Ogura who had been recommended for his character and his expert knowledge of hydrography accepted the opportunity. He studied the world map for the possible location of the unknown phosphate resources. He knew that there were only two watery regions in the world which had remained unexplored or uncharted, one of them being in the South China Sea, a region which all mariners avoided. He decided to choose this unknown region. In April, 1918, the Rasa Rinko Company at its shareholders' meeting approved of the annual expenditure of ¥100,000 for the exploration of new phosphate resources.

The world shipping boom was still on and it was exceedingly difficult to secure any vessel. However, by mere accident Commander Ogura came upon one at Tsukiji, a sailing boat of 57 tons burthen, which immediately attracted him. It was found that the boat was no other than the Hokoku Maru in which a generation ago Lieutenant Gunji, of the Imperial Navy, had sailed up to the unknown north exploring the Kurile Islands. Fortunately, the boat was available.

Repaired, rigged and victualled, the sailing boat set out from Maten, in the Loo Choo Islands, on December 14, 1918, with a crew of six officers and 10 men. Taking a southerly course the boat early on December 26 came in sight of the northernmost island of the group. But their landing had to be postponed, for true to their name of the Storm Islands violent storms went on for days and nights. It was not until December 30 that they could go ashore.

This island was identified as North Danger Island which had been discovered by Commander Reed of the British navy in 1867-8. Another island was found to the south within a short distance, and to these islands the Rasa Rinko Company later gave the name of Futako Shima (twin islands), calling the northern one Kita (North) Futako and the southern one Minami (South) Futako Shima.

From that point the boat set sail a week later and directed its course to what is marked on the chart as West York, in memory of the steamship of the same name which had been wrecked there. This small island, because green with grass and bushes, was later renamed Nishi Ao (West Green) Shima.

On January 10, 1919, the vessel, sailing westward, reached what the Chinese had called Tieh Tu which, because of its triangular shape, was named Sankaku Shima (triangle island). Next, resuming its journey, the ship reached what is marked on the chart as Itu Aba, which, because of its long shape, was renamed Nagashima (Long Island). The explorers then turned in the direction of Amboyna which is now called Maru Shima (Round Island). When they had come as far as this point, they could make no further way because of lack of fresh water and bad weather conditions. Discontinuing the exploration the boat made its way straight from that point to Labuan, of Borneo, reaching Victoria on January 18.

Through this expedition Commander Ogura's party explored the following islands of what is now known as the Shin Nan Gunto: Kita Futako Shima (North Danger Northeast Cay); Minami Futako Shima (South Danger Southwest Cay); Nishi Ao Shima (West York); Nagashima (Itu Aba); Sankaku Shima (Tieh Tu).

The second expedition to the Shin Nan group was undertaken in 1920 under the leadership of Commander Murahachi Soeshima of the Imperial Navy. A crew of 11, taking a sailing boat named Wake Maru, left Japan on November 15, 1920, and arrived at North Danger on December 24. Exploration was conducted until March of the following year. They explored and set up landmarks on the following islands: Naka Ko Shima (Loai Ta), Minami Ko Shima (Nan Yit), Nishi Tori Shima (Spratly), Maru Shima (Amboyan).

In 1921 the Rasa Rinko Company purchased a steam boat of 90 tons which, loaded with building materials, provisions and equipment, set sail from Yokohama on May 12, the whole party consisting of some 20 men. They made their base at Nagashima where a pier, office and lodges were established. In September the party returned to Japan and again went out there in November.

In June 1923 the company bought a sailing boat equipped with an auxiliary engine and placed it in service to maintain communications between the islands where phosphate mining had been commenced in various places. Exploration was pushed on in other directions and in this occasion two new islands were brought to light, namely, Kikko Shima formerly marked as "Flat" and Asuka Shima charted as "Sin Cowe."

The islands placed on the chart through successive explorations are more than 20 in number, and are now grouped as the Shin Nan Gunto and placed under the jurisdiction of the Government-General of Formosa. Of this group those of major dimensions number 11. The gross area of the entire group is given at 458,600 tsubo.

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATION METHODS IN AMERICA VIEWED IN TWO WAYS

They Are Productive of Self-Reliance but New Schools Often Fail in Supplying Discipline

By CAROLINE B. ZACHRY
Chairman of the Commission on Secondary School Curriculum, Progressive Education Association

N.Y. Times

World-shaking events, such as wars, are apt to bring people to a sudden realization that society has been changing more rapidly than they had ever suspected. This sharp and rather uncomfortable realization is always accompanied by a constructive effort to take stock in many fields—in government, in education, in medicine. We are passing through a period of this sort now. And a generation ago we experienced the same shock of change and the same compelling need to revise our old accustomed ways.

To Meet Demands

It is no accident that the Progressive Education Association was formed at the close of the first World War. The association arose in response to a feeling shared by many educators at that time, that something had to be done to make schools more ready to meet the demands of a changing world.

A pupil learns best, the progressive educator contends, when the material he is studying has a meaningful purpose in terms of his daily experience. Thus the progressive school abandons drill in the multiplication table, the memorizing of facts, names and dates. Instead the pupil learns about arithmetic by helping to run a school savings bank, or by computing the dimensions of a chair which he will make in the carpentry shop. He learns about plants by raising real plants, or by arranging a botany exhibit, not by memorizing the names of flowers he has never seen.

The method applies to other fields of study. Reading a prescribed number of pages in a civics textbook may give a pupil nothing more than a sense of remoteness about government processes, a feeling that the government is something one reads about and then conveniently dismisses. But if he participates in conducting a school election or visiting a local government agency at work, he will gain a first-hand experience, a grasp of the practical operations of government, which will bring to life any subsequent reading he may do. Through learning of this type, the world in which he lives takes on a sensible and expanding significance for the child.

Naturally, in such an approach, the division between fields of study is not as sharp as it is in the traditional curriculum, where spelling is kept in a class period distinct from civics, and geography is scrupulously separated from arithmetic. Although progressive educators have abandoned this neat pigeon-holing of knowledge, they continue to teach the basic skills.

They have found that the pupil learns to spell and to handle numbers most successfully by carrying out projects in which these skills are meaningfully related. A school election is more than a lesson in civics. The preparation of leaflets and reports provides the student with a realistic situation in which to test his ability to spell and use language. In working out the distribution of votes, he is engaged in a dramatically vital problem of arithmetic. He not only receives constant practice in using skills and factual information; he uses them with a purpose. They become a functioning part of the job he is doing.

Healthier, Constructive Motives

The normal child will want to do his job well, for in this way he gains the respect of his fellow-students and grows in his feeling of personal worth. As incentives to learning, these are healthier and more constructive motives than the fear of receiving bad marks or the desire to outdo other students in competing for the teacher's approval. In seeking to develop the whole child, not merely his spelling skill or his arithmetical ability, progressive methods of teaching appeal to motives which are productive of self-reliance and initiative. The child strengthens his own sense of discipline as he faces increasing responsibilities in the ordinary course of his school life.

It is argued that the progressive school makes learning too easy, too pleasant. The argument that mental discipline comes only from sticking, against one's will, to a hated task stems from the tradition that learning is best done when accompanied by pain! It is a denial of interest and pleasure in work. The argument is disproved every day in the performance of progressive school pupils, whose power of self-discipline is far more effective as a means of directing their actions than the old discipline imposed by an ever present teacher.

One difficulty in appraising the effectiveness of progressive education lies in such intangible results as the exercise of initiative, leadership, cooperation and critical thinking. These are less readily measured on achievement tests than are skills in tool subjects. Yet they are positive values of the progressive method, and have had positive results in educating students for social and personal growth. In twenty years the progressive movement has succeeded in giving pupils a more vital understanding of the changing world in which they live, of their responsibilities in a democratic way of life.

We face the problem of war again. The progressive school child does not need extrinsic rewards or punishments to make him work; nor does the progressive school and college graduate need banners and bands to interest him in defense. In talking to such graduates I am impressed not only by their capacity for hard work and critical thinking about our national problems, but by their complete willingness to serve in any areas which best meets the needs of our country regardless of personal rewards and glory.

Patriotic Youth

Our youth are maturely patriotic—much more so than we were during the last World War. They do not need "pep talks" and rallies; they can weigh evidence and act on it. Perhaps progressive education cannot claim the credit for all of this greater emotional maturity among young people—it would be very hard to prove. But it does seem fair to say that in my experience it has unquestionably played a distinctive role in helping the young people with whom I work to face the difficult realities of our times.

Liberalizing principles and methods of teaching did not originate of course, with the Progressive Education Association. They had been practiced under various names, or under no name at all, for generations, long before any organization was formed, and they are being practiced today by many teachers in traditional schools. The association cannot be given credit for all liberal and progressive achievements in teaching, nor can it be blamed for all the errors made in its name. It has merely served to give progressive trends a co-ordinated form and a conscious direction.

In spite of their achievements, progressive educators cannot be complacent. They have become critical by habit through examining the weaknesses of traditional schools, and they are no less alert to the shortcomings of their own schools. They have sought to link the school with community living, to have the pupil learn about local activities by taking an active part in the work of the community. But they have not yet found effective techniques for accomplishing this purpose. It is a vast undertaking, with vast educative possibilities, for it demands that the community as well as the pupil be educated for this type of participation.

Clarification Needed

Progressive educators have also sought to extend our limited knowledge of the child. They have led the way in investigating the complex factors related to his behavior at school—his early development, his life at home, his physical growth, his interests and attitudes. But greater clarification is needed for an educational policy aimed at helping children adjust themselves to the normal problems which beset every individual.

The self-confessed failure of some teachers in progressive schools reveals how much greater are the demands on teacher ability as compared with those made by the traditional school. The mediocre teacher is happier, and safer, in imparting information, hearing recitation, keeping order in the classroom. Possibly, the children too are safer, if not happier. There is nothing new in this. Long ago Locke said that wisdom, not learning, is required of a teacher.

A satisfactory program of teacher training still remains to be devised. Such a program would select prospective teachers with personalities suited to working with children.

Progressive educators are under no illusion that they have settled all problems of education or that they ever will. They recognize that schools are merely part of a dynamic society which, as we realize today, is accelerating the pace of its change. As old problems are solved, new ones will arise inevitably. It has been the function of progressive educators to remain alive to change and to welcome the challenge of new problems.

By MARY ELLEN CHASE
Professor of English Literature, Smith College

I have been asked to give a brief opinion on progressive education in our schools. Before I do so, I should like to make clear two things: First, that I am in no sense one who condemns the so-called "progressives" without praise for certain of their theories and for certain of their accomplishments; and, second, that my attitude toward them as teachers has been the result not so much of a first-hand inspection of their methods as of my dealing for a dozen years as a college teacher with students trained in those schools established and run upon their educational ideas and ideals.

Within and Outside School

I have always both favored and practiced, within limits, the basic theories of the progressives. But I did this long before there was such an institution as a progressive school. All teachers worthy of the name, from Roger Ascham and before, have believed that a child is an individual, that his inheritance and environment, temperament and tastes should be taken into intelligent account in his training, and that, in so far as seems wise and profitable both for himself and for others, he should be allowed to develop his own talents and follow his own bent within school and outside it.

Such obvious truths are in no sense new. All intelligent teachers who possess humor and personality as well as intellect have made these the groundwork of their teaching with no undue fuss about them. It is only in the new and sometimes too violent emphasis upon them that the progressives are reformers, iconoclasts and apostles. And it is because of this undue emphasis, as I see it, that certain of the progressive schools have "gone haywire" in their preparation of adolescents for college and for life in a confused world.

The undue emphasis upon the individuality of a child trails in its wake the danger that his personality will be exploited to his own hurt, that he will be made overconscious of himself and too tenacious of his "rights," and that he will become imbued with the idea that life outside school will be as kind to his predilections and perversities as life within it. Experience has ironically revealed to most of us that such is assuredly not the case. Life is not run so much on the pleasant principle of doing what one likes best to do as on the unpleasant necessity of adjusting one's self to all manner of distasteful and unpleasant exigencies.

For this unpleasant necessity some manner and measure of discipline in

MINISTRY DECIDES BUILDING PROGRAM

Home Officials Determine on Hamamatsu Canal, Highway Construction Projects

Construction of a canal capable of accommodating 10,000 tons which will connect Toyohashi, in Aichi Prefecture, and Hamamatsu, in Shizuoka Prefecture, a distance of some 25 miles, will be started by the Home Ministry in the near future, the Nichi Nichi reports.

The plan of excavating this waterway, and giant projects of building super-highways all over the mainland, and utilizing the water of Lake Biwa for power generation purposes were formally decided at a meeting of the directors of the public works offices of the Home Ministry here recently.

The bills regarding these three projects will be introduced in the Diet next year, it is said.

The canal linking Toyohashi with Hamamatsu along the Tokaido line has loomed larger before the nation as the section has become one of the busiest industrial centers of Japan of late.

Increase in Output

The ever-increasing production, and volume of trade there demands the construction of a harbor for Hamamatsu. But the rugged shores of Hamamatsu, facing the Pacific, make a harbor construction project almost impracticable. Yet the demand must be met with in someway or other, and the Home Ministry has finally decided on the construction of a canal between the two cities via Lake Hamana.

For the transportation of goods, ships displacing 10,000 tons will be steaming to and fro in this waterway before long, says the paper.

The survey of routes for projected super-highways uniting Tokyo with Shimonoseki by way of Nagoya and Osaka will be completed by the beginning of June.

The section between Nagoya and Osaka where a straight road will be built, could be covered in less than two hours when the whole course is completed, according to the paper.

Lake Project Beneficial

Less spectacular but more beneficial than these two programs will be the project of utilizing the water of Lake Biwa for power generation and drinking purposes.

The plan was first conceived by the Shiga prefectural authorities and the Osaka Public Works Office. Having formally taken up the job, the Home Ministry will ask the Diet for an appropriation of ¥60,000,000 next year.

Mr. Ichiro Narita, chief of the public works bureau of the Home Ministry, in this connection, told the Nichi Nichi that public works had to be pushed forward, keeping pace with the tempo of industrial development in this country.

"Especially at a time like today, construction projects must be realized one by one from the national point of view in complete disregard of special interests of one district or one prefecture.

"At a meeting a few days ago, the Ministry decided to complete the trunk lines of transportation as soon as possible in the face of the shortage of various materials." concluded.

U.S. SYNTHETIC RUBBER PRODUCTION INCREASING

Output Reaches 1,000,000 lbs. Per Month, Professor Glockler States

I.N.S.

IOWA, March 5.—American production of synthetic rubber supplies has reached 1,000,000 pounds a month, according to Professor George Glockler of the University of Iowa, who said that this country would have to depend entirely on such rubber should Germany defeat Britain.

Professor Glockler, head of the university's chemistry department, pointed out that German victory would give the Nazis control of the sources of natural raw rubber in the East Indies, and that sufficient accessible supplies do not exist elsewhere for American industry.

The synthesized product is made from coal, lime and water in one process, and can be made from petroleum by another method.

"Germany and Russia have been using synthetic or artificial rubber exclusively for several years because of the danger of being cut off from British supplies," he said.

"The result is that America now buys 90 per cent of the world's supply of raw rubber."

Seven different kinds of synthetic rubber now are being produced in the United States, according to Professory Glockler. In some respects, it is superior to the natural product, although considerably more expensive at present. It has higher resistance to air, heat, sunlight, oils and fats.

"Raw rubber still dominates and, until it is no longer available, the price of synthetic rubber will remain high," the Iowa scientist said.

"When synthetic rubber becomes the only thing we have, however, then mass production will come about, and low prices will follow."

Nichiren Followers Federate

Priests and believers of the Nichiren sect of Buddhism in Tokyo organized a federation at a ceremony held at the Hibiya Public Hall yesterday afternoon. U.S. SEEKS REVIVAL OF RUBBER SECTORS

Surveys Pushed in Central, South America to Re-establish Industry

I.N.S.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—A survey of potential rubber areas in Central and South America to re-establish the once thriving South American industry has just been completed by the Department of Agriculture.

The results of this step are expected to go far in cementing the relations of the United States with the 20 Latin American republics.

The survey, made by rubber specialists under Dr. E. C. Stakman of the University of Minnesota, located areas most suitable for commercial rubber growing and made arrangements for nurseries where the small rubber trees will be grown on a large scale. These Hevea (scientific term for the small rubber plant) will be used as root-stocks on which to multiply the superior strains of Hevea already assembled by the Department from sources throughout the world. The group also collected seed from promising wild rubber trees in the various areas.

The party surveyed an area which covered roughly the head-waters of the Amazon tributaries east of the Andes in Peru and an area west of the Andes in Ecuador and Colombia.

Four Locations Selected

Four locations were selected for nurseries, two in Peru, one in Columbia, and one in Ecuador. These nurseries will become part of a chain extending throughout the tropical areas of Central and South America. All countries participating will share the superior disease-resistant strains already developed by the Department.

To date nurseries have been arranged for or planned in more than a dozen localities in Central and South America. Between three and four tons of seed have been planted in these nurseries.

Recently the War Department ordered army bombers to fly a cargo of seed from the United States to Berlin, in the Brazilian state of Para. The highly selected seed had missed the regularly scheduled boat to Brazil and to avoid spoiling, it was flown to Belim by way of the Panama Canal and Trinidad, newly acquired British base. The Agriculture Department had carefully chosen this seed in the Philippines for the high yielding qualities and disease resistance. It will be given severe tests in the Para area.

Three other parties are still in Latin America. One is in Panama, one in Mexico. Another party is in the Philippines collecting seed and budwood.

After all the survey parties have returned, the next step will be locating at least two experimental stations. Breeding, culture, and disease control problems will be investigated by the Bureau of Plant Industry.

The Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations will co-ordinate the Department of Agriculture's rubber research work with that of other federal agencies.

The department is conducting the entire investigation including the preliminary surveys in co-operation with the Latin American republics that have suitable soil and climate for growing rubber. Results of the work will be available to all countries co-operating and to large and small growers, the Department said.

Dr. Stakman reported that a cordial reception was given his party wherever they visited. The Peruvian Government supplied airplanes, motor cars, and lent the party a river gunboat.

In each country, scientists of the local governments joined in the survey, Stakman declared.

The rubber tree is a native of tropical America, and once the United States obtained all of its rubber in this hemisphere, the Department concluded. Since 1910, however, most of our rubber has been imported from the British Malay Settlements and the Dutch East Indies.

CONCERTED PLAYING NOTED FOR RECITAL

Moguilewski and Sirota Present Third and Last of Beethoven Cycle Series

An enterprise of cultural significance in the musical life of Tokyo was successfully brought to a conclusion last night when Professor Alexandre Moguilewski and Professor Leo Sirota gave the third and last concert in their Beethoven Cycle, presenting all of the composer's ten sonatas for violin and piano. Like the previous two programs, last night's concert was held at the Hibiya Public Hall before a large and enthusiastic audience filling the spacious auditorium nearly to capacity.

For the third program, the two artists selected Beethoven's first Violin Sonata, Opus 12, in D major, as the opening number. Though an early work, it already contains in its three movements—Allegro con brio, Andante con moto (Theme and variations), Allegro (Rondo)—the composer's masterly conception of the great classical sonata form.

The next number was the Sonata No. 8, in G major, being the third of three works in Beethoven's Opus 30. Great variety is found in the moods of its three movements, the Romantic emotion of the opening Allegro assai, the charming delicacy of the Tempo di menuetto, and the brilliance and spirited humor of the concluding Allegro vivace.

Of all of Beethoven's violin sonatas, the most popular with the general public, and at the same time undoubtedly the most brilliant work is the No. 9 in A major, Opus 47, which is known as the Kreutzer Sonata because it was dedicated to the eminent French violin virtuoso Rodolphe Kreutzer. This work, Mr. Moguilewski and Mr. Sirota did well in using it for the concluding number of their cycle.

The outstanding success of this cycle, which held the attention of the public for three nights, and each time from the first note to the last, has again served to demonstrate the increasing appreciation of quality which has been a feature of the development and growth of the Japanese musical life.

Mr. Moguileswki, the violinist, and Mr. Sirota, the pianist, who have both been playing prominent roles in concert activities here for more than a decade, hardly need any reaffirmation of their superior musical and artistic qualities on this occasion.

The perfection of their concerted playing, which combined individual technical brilliance with a perfectly matched chamber music style, was as much in evidence in last night's performances at as it was during the earlier concerts of this cycle. Both musicians were in excellent shape, and reached the top of their perfection in the Kreutzer Sonata. There could hardly be found a work in the literature for the violin and the piano which makes greater technical demands on the two performing musicians than the Kreutzer Sonata. The breath-taking precision of last night's performance was paired with an impetuosity and virtuosity of the interpretation in a way which only a few of the greatest international soloists are able to achieve.

Enthusiastic approval was given after each number, and the storms of applause which followed the rendition of the Kreutzer Sonata did not give in until the two artists conceded an encore, repeating one of the sonata movements from the earlier part of the program.

ROOSEVELT POLICY SAID COMMERCIAL

Object of U.S. Is to Swallow Up Britain and China, Writer Holds

President Roosevelt with his message to Congress requesting the immediate appropriation of $4,000,000,000 under the newly enacted lease-lend law, clearly shows that he has risen up as the world's only wholesaler of Democracy, Mr. Soho Tokutomi, noted commentator, declares in the Nichi Nichi.

This act of the President, Mr. Tokutomi asserts, is not in the least surprising. "His act, though sudden and unthinkable has long been expected by those who have closely surveyed his mentality. All depends upon his sense of commercialism. Placed under any kind of circumstance, he never fails to consider profits expressed in terms of money."

Claiming that the present moves of the United States are centered on the President's mercenary motives, Mr. Tokutomi goes on to explain his views:

"The first thing I notice about the commercially-inclined aims of the United States is that this policy is going to be the practical successor of those formerly practiced by Great Britain. Faced by the decisive action of Germany and Italy, Great Britain is now in a position where its life for tomorrow cannot very well be predicted. The country is now like a drowning man clutching at a straw. Usually alert and sensitive to calculation, Great Britain is sacrificing everything it has for the sake of obtaining aid from the United States.

"It is this condition that President Roosevelt is shrewd enough to make the most of. He is now preparing to devour the country like a hungry wolf finding a horse. Limb after limb, the poor victim is being lost between the greedy jaws of the wolf. It will not be long before nothing is left of Great Britain.

"The second object of America's ambition is China. China, under General Chiang Kai-shek, may be likened to the same under the reign of the Later Chin dynasty, about 1,000 years ago. Shin Chiang-tang of Chin, bribed by Chitan, sold 16 provinces to the latter. This is one of the most remarkable instances of traitorous chicanery in Chinese history. The same is now being attempted by Chiang Kai-shek. The mentality of Chiang is perfectly understood by the United States, which is well proved by the latter's every possible aid to the Chungking regime.

"Thus, the American avarice is going to be satisfied with two victims, in the East and the West, respectively. I would not hesitate to forecast that the American policies will become apparent more and more toward realizing its aim of annexing the two objects.

"There goes a saying that every kind of evil is being done under the beautiful name of virtue. Now many wicked things are intended to be attained under the fascinating name of democracy. It is our duty that we watch over the trend of democracies. In short, we must clearly understand that the world is placed under a struggle between democracies based on commercialism and the countries based on man's justice. In the last analysis it is a war of man against money."

MISS ANNIE B. WEST DIES IN AMERICAN RETIREMENT

Former Tokyo Missionary and Red Cross Worker Succumbs in Pennsylvania

A cable has been received in Tokyo announcing the death of Miss Annie B. West on March 13.

Miss West was born in 1860 and first came to Japan in 1883 as a member of the Japan Mission of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. After a short residence in Yokohama she came to Tokyo, where she lived until her retirement from active service in 1924.

Many residents of Tokyo, both Japanese and foreign, remember the house in Nishimachi, Shiba Ward, where Miss West and her devoted friends, Mrs. Caroline A. MacNair, lived for many years. Miss West's missionary career was an unusual one. She had many friends among Japanese of the highest social position and at the same time called regularly upon the prisoners in certain Tokyo prisons. She contributed to the work of the organized Church in Japan by assisting in the training of Bible women in a school at her home.

Miss West became well known to many Japanese through her outstanding work with the Japanese Red Cross during the Russo-Japanese War. For this service she was honored by having an Imperial decoration conferred upon her. For many years she visited patients in the Red Cross Hospital of Tokyo and had a wide acquaintanceship among its nurses. Since her return to the United States in 1924, Miss West has been living with her sister in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, where her death probably occurred. During the past two or three years she has been in rather frail health.

AIR CORPS IN U.S. TESTS GAS TANKS

Only Those Sealing Instantly After Being Holed Are Approved for Planes

INS.

DAYTON, March 1.—Many types of self-sealing gasoline tanks are being tested by the U.S. Army Air Corps at Wright Field but only those which seal instantly after being riddled by machine guns are approved for use in fighter planes.

For 20 years, Air Corps officials pointed out, new and better types of self-sealing tanks have been developed. But the calibers and penetrating powers of aircraft guns catch up with and pass the protective powers of the tanks, and so the "see-saw" race is on again.

The obvious solution, building gasoline tanks out of armor sufficiently heavy to stop bullets from the largest aircraft guns, is automatically ruled out. The weight would require sacrificing an equal weight of gasoline or armament and shrink the range and striking power of the airplane to the point where it would have little or no military value.

Lining Inserted in Tank

Aircraft engineers, therefore, turned to a gasoline tank which while not bullet-proof, absorbs gunfire without losing precious fuel through bullet holes. This is accomplished by inserting in the tank an adequate lining.

Many kinds of materials in various combinations are used inside the metal gas tank to make it self-sealing, officers explained. The material must be strong enough to resist bulging through bullet holes, must be insoluble in gasoline, incapable of being shattered into debris which would clog the fuel lines, and swell with sufficient rapidity upon being pierced to form a positive sealing element.

Self-sealing tanks, Wright Field attaches asserted, do not assure absolute protection against all shots. However, they do reduce the hazard of all shots and are effective in accomplishing complete sealing to a very high degree.

At Wright Field, new types of self-sealing materials are subjected to a series of five tests.

Subject to Aging Test

Small models are fabricated from the various materials; the models are filled with gasoline and subjected to an aging test in which comparative data are secured concerning the length of time in which the lining materials become saturated and require replacement.

Most spectacular is the gunfire test. Armament and ordnance engineers perform the actual firing at point-blank range. If the tanks survive the singles and bursts of small guns, they shift over to the big guns.

A withering burst from the heavy caliber gun is the pay-off. If no leaks appear after this punishment, the tank shows promise and is ready for temperature tests. In the latter case, the tank is thoroughly chilled to a prescribed temperature below zero and then given the gunfire test again.

FINNS FIND IT HARD TO OBTAIN SUPPLIES

British Blockade Makes It Necessary to Truck Supplies Overland From Petsamo

Domei

HELSINGFORS, March 17.—Gasoline is scarce in Finland today but you wouldn't know it from the traffic that flows over the Arctic highway from Petsamo to Rovaniemi.

With the Baltic Sea virtually an inland lake as a result of the British blockade, the narrow winding ribbon of concrete connecting the Petsamo harbor of Liinahamari with the rail head at Rovaniemi has become Finland's lifeline.

Around the clock in the pale Arctic winter twilight long columns of Finnish, German and Swedish trucks roll over the narrow road with its hundreds of curves and bridges and scores of sharp dips and rises.

To meet the demands of the increased traffic an army of men work to improve the road, but it still is far from good. Only hardy and experienced drivers can navigate its 350 miles, and they are comparatively well-paid, receiving the equivalent of $20 for the round-trip.

Although the highway, according to experts, has a capacity of 10,000 tons daily there never has been more than 2,000 tons shipped in one day. German and Swedish shipments, which are about equal, are estimated to amount to 40 per cent of the total volume.

The bottleneck in shipments by this route is at the port of Liinahamari. A small village until two years ago, Liinahamari has only one modern dock long enough for two ships. There are no loading cranes or storehouses.

It is estimated that the harbor of Liinahamari at present can handle only 2,000 tons a day, but only 25 or 30 per cent of this amount gets to Rovaniemi now because of a lack of trucks and experienced drivers.

The limited facilities at Liinahamari and the British blockade of the Baltic have cut sharply into Finnish supplies. The shortage of foodstuffs and other vital commodities is reported to be even greater than was anticipated last fall when rations were fixed.

Complicating Finland's problems is a lack of ready cash with which to purchase supplies from the Soviet Union, the only nation to which it can turn. A Soviet-Finnish trade pact provides that Finland must pay in cash when its arrearage on purchases reaches $500,000.

Making purchases from the United States or South America not only involves the problem of payment but also of transport. Finland applied for a $7,000,000 credit in the latter part of 1940 from the United States but up to this time it has not been granted. England has granted Finland navicerts for foodstuffs but has not allowed it to accumulate any stocks of potential military importance.

Finland's most urgent needs are rye and wheat for bread, fats, meat and raw materials for her textile industries. Finland's Minister of Supplies told the United Press that there is only enough rye and wheat on hand to last until the end of May.

The Finnish cotton industry employs 30,00 workers but because of a shortage of raw materials has been forced to work far below capacity. But the industry has avoided wholesale dismissals by working two-days-a-week shifts.

CZECHS USE U.S. EMBLEM

Design of American Flag Is Pattern Of Regimental Battle-Standard

I.N.S.

CHICAGO, March 11.—The American Colors are going into action in defense of Britain as the battle-standard of the First Artillery Regiment of the Czechoslovak army in England.

This was disclosed by Dr. Jan Papanek, representative in Chicago of Eduard Benes, provisional president of the Czechoslovak Government-In-Exile.

While the Stars and Stripes will not be officially represented, the thirteen red and white stripes and the 48 stars on a blue field are displayed prominently in the regimental battle-standard.

Already accepted by the First Artillery Regiment, the battle-standard was presented by the American Sokols Union with participation by Sokols in Chicago. It was handed over to the regiment by Benes and Dr. Jan Masaryk, minister in the Czechoslovak provisional cabinet.

On one side of the standard is the Czechoslovak white lion, a Czech emblem. On the other are the Stars and Stripes, in the pattern of the American flag.

plan is likely to be drafted within this week. As is the case with any structural reform, its objective ever must be connected with its smooth working. The association as a public organization should carry out reform of its own. No outside pressure should work on it. Frankly speaking, the objective of the Throne aid movement has not yet been clearly made known to the people at large. Slogans or catchwords such as "fulfilment of duty as Imperial subjects" and "services to the nation through respective occupations" are matters of nominal significance.

Has the association ever carried out a systematic movement? It once took up measures counteracting unemployment and job shifting, but nothing has been heard of its concrete plan since it made public its first statement. The association also worked on national thought toward the United States, as a result of a conference of its standing directors. The subsequent development of the matter has been disappointing to us. In reality, this has fallen through. It seems that the association follows a policy of separating system from movement. This is absolutely not wise, because the policy lacks unity and disjointed. This defect must be remedied first of all.

A special program of vaudeville performers under the management of the Yoshimoto amusement enterprises will be given at 6 o'clock this evening in the Hibiya Public Hall. It will consist of dance, music, and comic show. The performance will be sponsored by the Tokyo Municipal Government under the motto of "entertaining the citizens behind the guns."

A group of young Kabuki actors, including Ganjuro, Yaozo, Royen and Genjuro, who had been playing in the southern part of Japan, will return to the capital at the end of this month after making a visit to Kyushu.

Opening today at the Shinjukuza, one of the leading theaters in Shinjuku district, is a new bill consisting of four dramas, namely, Shunjitsu Chichi (the delayed arrival of the spring days), Muryoku no Ben (a powerless speech), Sakana no Nakama (Fish and its comrades) and Tsubaki Hime (the Japanese version of La Traviata). Actors and actresses of the Moulin Rouge, popular dramatic group, will play.

With matinee on Sunday, the modern-school dramatic troupe known as the Kokuritsu Butai will play at the Kokumin Shin Gekijo, Tsukiji (the old Tsukiji Little Theater) for five days from March 26. The performance will be featured by Minzoku no Hata (The flag of a race), a new melodrama by Mr. Koji Sakura. The doors will open at 6 p.m. daily except Sunday, when the drama will be staged twice, one from noon and the other in the evening.

The Nikkatsu has acquired the right of filming a novel called Umi no Miyeru Iye (a house, from which the sea can be seen), which was broadcast recently from JOAK. The story was written by Mr. Hideaki Kurosaki dealing with a young man who has been called to the colors and his father.

The Toho Motion Picture Company is now planning to produce a comedy called Jinsei we Rokujuichi kara (Life Begins at 61), which will be released before the summer season. The cast has been completed. Entatsu, Yuriko Hanabusa, Ichiro Tsukida, Kyoko Mifune and Achako have been assigned to important roles.

The Hogakuza, Taishokan and Musashinokan, three first-class motion picture theaters of the SY banner, will repeat I married Adventure, a new Columbia picture, for two weeks from today. The Hibiya Eiga Gekijo will release from tomorrow The Young in Heart, a United Artists picture, which recently made a hit in the three theaters mentioned above.

The Japanese superimposed version of Destry Rides Again, one of the newly imported pictures by Universal, which is regarded as one of the big attractions to be released on local screens during the current season, has been completed recently.

United Artists has decided to import South of Pago Pago and The Long Voyage Home. Preview at the customs house will be held upon the arrival of these films.

Motion pictures which were not approved by the Education Ministry for the showing before children in the year 1940 according to the motion picture law, totaled 103, including 87 Japanese and 16 foreign productions.

Columbia has started to make the Japanese superimposed version of Mr. Smith Goes to Washington and Arizona, two newly imported pictures.

As the Government has decided to unify the distribution of culture pictures under the Japan News Eigasha, a meeting of the board of directors was held at the Japan News Eigasha recently when it approved the following items unanimously after discussions attended by Mr. Fuwa, Information Board official, says Domei. 1. The Japan News Eigasha will become a control organ for the execution of national motion picture policy. 2. For this purpose, the company will produce and distribute cultural features and propaganda films as well. 3. To achieve these objects, motion picture producers' participation and co-operation will be sought to enlarge the activities of the company, of which the name and regulations will be changed.

The Japan News Eigasha has decided to dispatch Mr. S. Taguchi, chief of its foreign section, to America in an endeavor to enlarge the activity of the overseas newsreels. Mr. Taguchi will sail from Yokohama by the Nitta Maru today for the United States where he is expected to stay for two years.

In an endeavor to fix an appropriate and just price of motion pictures, the Home Ministry has been making every effort. Mr. Ito, official of the Ministry, has talked with motion picture companies and producers concerned to hear the production cost and other expenses while, on the other hand, has been studying the actual conditions of the exhibitors, says the Miyako. In anticipation of these circumstances, some distributors are said to have already contemplating raising the price of pictures before the decision of the proper and just price is reached. Dispute has been created between distributors and exhibitors in connection with the price problem. It is thought that there are a large number of troubles of this kind throughout the country, which have been brought up in court. It is to wonder, the paper says, that the distributing companies cannot remain without raising prices because of the enhanced cost of production as a result of an increase of various expenses. On the other hand, cinema houses are at present unable to pay even at the rate of the past price due to the decreased attendance figures. But because of the difference in economic strength, the exhibitors have suffering from hardships. In fact, the second and third-class theaters have a depressed business. The theaters owners, who have been discussing counter-measures, will appeal to the Home Ministry, asking for an immediate arrangement of the price, and not to approve a price-raise under any circumstances. No prediction can be made as to what reply the Ministry will give, but unrest is being felt for the future of the price problem as a result of the depression of the second and third-class theaters.

Rice Rationing to Start

Osaka and six other adjoining cities of Sakai, Kishiwada, Fuse, Toyonaka, Ikeda and Fukida will enforce the rationing system for rice in order to perfect the present distribution program, starting April 1, reports Domei.

DIET MEMBERS EYE REVIVAL OF TOHOKAI

Settlements Committee Takes Up Party, Publications Issues, But Settles Nothing

The settlements committee of the House of Representatives met at 2:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The meeting had been arranged by Speaker Shoju Koyama of the House at the request of members who expressed a desire to put questions to the Government regarding the Tohokai which has been revived by Mr. Seigo Nakano and a publication brought out by a leading member of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association.

Home Minister Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma and Director Masazane Hashimoto of the Police Bureau of the Home Ministry were on hand for questioners who included Mr. Ryo Koyama and Mr. Inajiro Asanuma.

Mr. Koyama demanded to know whether the Government does not consider the appearance of a powerful political party necessary for the settlement of the situation confronting the country.

For Total Mobilization

The reply by Home Minister Hiranuma was that the entire resources of the nation should be mobilized to overcome the difficulties facing the country and that it was a nice question to determine whether a new political party is necessary to ensure that there will be a full display of the total power of the nation.

Mr. Asanuma pointed out that there has been a revival of the Tohokai, which was supposed to have gone out of existence at the time the Imperial Rule Assistance Association was formed, and asked what the Government, which appeared to have made up its mind to disband all political parties at the time the Konoye Cabinet came to office, would do if political parties sprung into existence following the proposed reconstruction of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association.

Declines to Reply

Director Hashimoto excused himself from making a reply.

Mr. Kanjiro Fukuda demanded to know what the Home Ministry intends to do about a member of the Throne aid association who has brought out a book containing passages casting a slight on the national structure.

The reply by Director Hashimoto was that as far as he knew the judicial authorities had started an investigation of the matter.

The session adjourned at 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

POLICE TO CRACK DOWN ON CHARCOAL DEALERS

Merchants Who Refuse to Make Deliveries Will Be Punished

Tokyo charcoal dealers who refused to make deliveries to their customers' homes will be punished severely in the future, the Metropolitan Police Board announced Monday, according to Domei.

Police authorities have had to remind charcoal dealers from time to time since last autumn to obey regulations in their sales. Authorities were stirred lately, then, when they received a great number of complaints from many persons, disclosing how they had been treated by haughty dealers who refused flatly to deliver the charcoal.

"I know they must deliver, for the price of charcoal includes the cost of delivery, but they don't. So I have to carry it on my back or by a taxi," one letter said.

The officials of the charcoal section of the Metropolitan Police Board declared Monday that dealers who do not change their practices will be handled very roughly when caught in their dishonest deeds.

RAILWAYS KEPT BUSY

Pleasure Seekers Discouraged to Alleviate Traffic Congestion

In view of the extraordinary congestion caused at Kobe station, the Kobe Tourist Bureau as well as station officials are urging the public to refrain from "pleasure-seeking tours."

Until the middle of February, the total number of passengers averaged about 18,000 with an income of about ¥13,000 per day, but a remarkable increase has been seen since the beginning of this month, the number of passengers averaging more than 20,000 and the income, approximately ¥17,000. Most of the passengers, it was found, were these hoping to "spend about two days at hot spring resorts for not more than ¥20," while those visiting places of historic interest or shrines have markedly decreased.

Those who are planning pleasure-tours, therefore, will be encouraged to go on hikes instead, thus saving expenses and simultaneously, alleviating the traffic conditions.

U.S. PLANES PERMITTED TO CROSS MEXICAN SOIL

American Army Allowed to Make Weekly Flights to Canal Zone

Domei

MEXICO CITY, March 19.—The proclamation of President Manuel Avila Camacho authorizing United States army aircraft visiting Panama to make weekly flights across Mexico and providing refueling facilities in Mexican territory was gazetted yesterday following approval by the Senate.

The proclamation sanctions one southbound flight from Brownsville, Texas, every Monday and one northbound flight from Panama every Friday with refueling stops.

The aircraft will be permitted to carry only three pilots, two enlisted men, two passengers, and 800 pounds of cargo.

The authorization permits a change in the designation of landing fields at the United States' discretion. It also legalizes a similar authorization given to the United States army by the Mexican Government last year.

BRITAIN ASKS AMERICA FOR NAVY YARD REPAIRS

Secretary Knox Discloses English Wish to Overhaul Damaged Vessels in U.S.

Domei

WASHINGTON, March 19.—Britain has asked for the use of United States navy yards to repair damaged vessels since enactment of the lease-lend bill, Navy Secretary Colonel Frank Knox disclosed at his press conference today. He withheld further information saying he wished to confine himself to the "bare and naked facts" that the request had been made.

Colonel Knox told correspondents that the United States navy has some facilities which Britain could use, explaining that "we always do have such facilities."

Commenting on the current visits of American naval squadrons to Auckland, New Zealand, and Sydney, Australia, he said the United States was "very closely in touch with Australia and greatly sympathizes with its aspirations."

No American naval vessels are in the South Pacific or Far Eastern waters other than those already made public, Colonel Knox said, adding that the squadrons now in the Antipodes soon would return to Honolulu.

SHINFUSO CIGARETTES WILL SELL AT 25-SEN

Brand Which Formerly Sold For 40-Sen Per Packet Appears in New Dress

A new brand of cigarettes, Shinfuso, and a large pack of Kinshi containing 20 cigarettes, will be on sale in tobacco shops in the city in the near future, says the Asahi.

The Shinfuso cigarettes will replace the Fuso brand which was considered as an expensive cigarette and was prohibited to be on sale from October 7, last year. The Fuso brand, manufactured from Turkish tobacco, was sold at a price of 40 sen per pack of 10 cigarettes. The new Fuso brand or the Shinfuso, will be manufactured from tobacco leaves in stock and be sold at a price of 25 sen per pack of 10 cigarettes. The new cigarettes are said to differ only a little bit in taste when compared with the former one. A Kinshi pack of 20 cigarettes will be sold at a price of 18 sen.

The Tobacco Monopoly Bureau of the Finance Ministry is contemplating measures of adjusting small tobacco dealers. Instructions in this concern were recently sent by the Bureau to each rural tobacco monopoly bureau. Small tobacco dealers are those who peddle tobacco in motion picture houses, theaters, baseball grounds and other places. The authorities plan to increase tobacco distribution to the public by this means.

U.S. ADDS TO OBSERVERS

Naval Experts Stationed Throughout Far East Australasia

Domei

NEW YORK, March 19.—The Associated Press reports today from Batavia that the United States rapidly is increasing its staff of naval experts in the Far East and South Pacific to keep a watchful eye on possible new developments.

Two officials each, the agency said, have been stationed at Singapore, Darwin, Sydney, Auckland and other points in addition to those regularly attached to the United States legations at Canberra and Bangkok.

The officers, however, reportedly are described as observers and not members of the United States diplomatic or consular services.

OIL AND GAS FOUND BY A NEW METHOD

Dr. Leo Horvitz Describes to Engineers Technique for Locating Deep Deposits

A new method for locating oil and natural gas deep below the surface, so sensitive that it determines the presence of hydrocarbon gases in small samples of soil in quantities as minute as two parts in a billion, was described before the annual meeting of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, at the Engineering Societies Building.

The method, described by Dr. Leo Horvitz of the Subterrex Company, Houston, Texas, is an advance in the recently developed new branch of science known as geochemistry that takes advantage of the fact that in the course of millions of years minute amounts of hydrocarbon gases, of which petroleum is composed, have slowly been seeping upward toward the surface from deep petroleum, deposits, even penetrating layers of rock.

The difficulty lay in finding a method sensitive enough to detect the minute amounts of the gases that managed to rise close to the surface and in developing a technique to interpret the findings from a practical point of view—that is, whether the minute amounts detected justified the expense of digging a deep well.

New Oil Fields Discovered

By the use of the new method, Dr. Horvitz reported, six entirely new oil fields in Texas already have been discovered. A well that had been dug to a depth of 8,000 feet without yielding oil, he related, was about to be abandoned, but digging was continued when the tests indicated the presence of oil at a lower depth. The deposit was located at 8,074 feet and opened up a new oil field.

The method utilizes both horizontal and vertical testing of soil samples. At the beginning an area of several square miles is tested by taking samples at a depth of twelve feet and analyzing them for their gas contents by microchemical methods, using low temperature fractionation and combustion methods. This determines whether or not oil is likely to be found below the surface and also the location at which to dig.

These tests are then supplemented by taking soil samples at depths of 30 feet. If oil is present, there is a significant rise in the amounts of the hydrocarbon gases in the soil samples with increases in depth, though these increases are not gradual, but come suddenly when certain levels are reached, depending on the depth of the deposit.

The oil deposit, Dr. Horvitz reported, is not found directly above the spot showing the greatest concentration of the gases in the surface soil, but at a level of low concentration located between two areas showing high concentrations. No explanation has so far been found for this phenomenon.

Mineral Gives a Clue

The research has also brought to light another new phenomenon that has provided another significant "divining rod" for oil. A certain inorganic mineral in the soil, the name of which was not disclosed, appears in soils above oil deposits at levels not far from the surface. This special chemical "divining rod," presently known as "Madame X," or MX, has been found to have the keenest nose for oil underground of any so far discovered, according to Dr. Horvitz.

The work is an outgrowth of pioneer investigations in this field by Dr. E. E. Rosaire of the Suxterrex Company.

Dr. Sylvain Pirson, Associate Professor of the Petroleum and Natural Gas Department of the Pennsylvania State University, reported the development of a highly sensitive apparatus for measuring leakages of hydrocarbon gases from unknown oil and natural gas fields.

Mr. H. W. Russell, Mr. H. Pray and Mr. Paul D. Miller of the Battle Memorial Institute, Columbus, Ohio, reported the development of a simple new method for detecting the susceptibility of stainless steels to corrosion in three minutes. The test is expected to be of considerable importance in the manufacture of articles for national defense.

Mr. Meredith E. Johnson, State geologist of New Jersey, reported that the tonnage of iron ore mined in New Jersey reached an all-time high last year—namely, 1,294,000 tons of crude ore from the four iron mines operating in the State. Iron mining in New Jersey, dormant for several years, revived at the outbreak of the war.

THAI STATUS HIGHER BY PARLEY SUCCESS

Japan's Leadership Also Assured in Far East—Mediation Overtures Are Told

The success of the Tokyo mediation conference has established Japan's position as the leader of the Far East and improved Thailand's international position greatly, says the Asahi correspondent at Bangkok.

Giving a thumb-nail sketch of the aftermath of the parley, as seen at the Thai capital, he writes as follows.

"The success of the Thai people in recovering its territories lost as a result of a war with the white people has largely enhanced the nationalistic sentiments of the nation. In fact, the Thai-Indo-China hostilities were a second challenge by an Oriental people to the white race, following the Russo-Japanese War, though it was fought on a far smaller scale. All East Asiatic races, watched with deep interest, Annamese and Malayans.

"These peoples were no doubt deeply inspired by Thailand's success and it will result in a variety of nationalistic movements — a development which Western powers who have colonies in East Asia must be most troubled about —and which will go a long way toward the creation of a new order in this part of the world.

"Thailand's recovery of Northern Laos, Luang Prabang, Central Pakse and the western part of Cambodia, totaling an area larger than Kyushu, was also a great success.

"Now that fighting in the eastern part has been brought to an end, the Thai army can concentrate its attention to the southwestern frontier where Australian and Indian troops had been sent by Britain. The British intention of intimidating Thailand by the troop concentration has resulted, curiously enough, in inviting Thai's preparedness.

Thai Looks to Japan

"Economically, Thailand has been becoming more dependent upon Japan than on Britain and America, following the Tokyo parley. But Britain and America will not dare to retaliate with an economic blockade of Thailand since it will make the country more dependent on Japan. The Anglo-Saxon nations will have to continue on good terms with Thailand until the end of the European War comes into sight.

"Thus militarily, economically and politically, the Tokyo parley has stabilized Thailand's position and enabled it to co-operate with Japan for the common aim of the co-prosperity of East Asiatic nations.

"The Thai as well as other East Asiatic peoples who had been oppressed by Occidental powers have now realized Japan's disinterested efforts for the creation of a new order in the Far East. Thai leaders are expressing the opinion that even the Chiang Kai-shek regime, if it understands Japan's fair attitude, will be persuaded to conclude peace with Japan.

"Western Imperialism in the Far East has reached its last stage and a new ideal of co-prosperity in the East Asia is going to take its place."

Regarding the Tokyo conference as it affects Japan-Anglo-American relations, the Asahi writer says.

"Mr. Jingo Futami, Japanese Minister at Bangkok, said that at one time the Tokyo conference was depaired of. The British Minister at Bangkok said that Japan's proposal for mediation came so suddenly that he could not take proper counter measures.

Japanese Diplomatic Coup

"Around January 12, British and American circles were endeavoring to mediate in the border trouble. A few days later the British Minister called on the Thai Foreign Vice-Minister to say that Britain was prepared to mediate. The Japanese Legation knew that the Anglo-American circles were designing mediation because of the hectic activities of Vichy's Minister at Bangkok.

"Learning that the French Minister was drafting a mediation plan favoring French Indo-China, the Japanese circles started to act. Minister Futami, who had just arrived at his post, and his military and naval attaches consulted the Home Government and negotiated with the Thai government. On January 24, both Thailand and French Indo-China accepted the Japanese proposal, to the great surprise of the Bangkok diplomatic circles.

"The British Minister, on confirming the news with the Thai foreign vice-minister at the Foreign Office, uttered harsh words, slipped and fell from the stair-case, it is said.

"Thailand hereafter will continue its policy of maintaining friendship with all countries. But the success of the Tokyo parley spells a total retreat of Britain and American diplomacy. Both the United States and British diplomatic representatives in Bangkok congratulated Thailand on the recovery of lost territories, expressing acquiescence in the change of the status quo. The fact shows that the Anglo-British diplomacy now finds itself in a difficult position."

America Is All Set To Jump Into War Commander Hints

President nor the head of any department or agency shall exercise any of such powers; except that until July 1, 1946, any of such powers may be exercised to the extent necessary to carry out a contract or agreement made before July 1, 1943, or made before the passage of the concurrent resolution, with a foreign Government whose defense is vital to our defense.

Sections 4 through 8 of HR 1776 are derived in substantially unchanged form from Sections 3 through 7 of the Aid-to-American-Republics Joint Resolution of June 15, 1940 (Public Res. No. 83, 76th Cong). The bill here reported, however, contains, in Section 5 (B), a provision for reports to the Congress from the President, discussed above, which finds no counterpart in the joint resolution.

Section 4 provides that defense articles and defense information supplied to other nations shall not be transferred by them to another nation without first obtaining the consent of the President.

Section 5 provides for the keeping of detailed records of defense articles and defense information supplies to other governments, and the submission of reports thereon to the Congress and to the Administrator of Export Control.

Section 6 (A) merely authorizes appropriations to be made of such amounts as may be needed to carry out the provisions of the bill. It does not appropriate any funds or permit the making of any contract to carry out any of the provisions of the bill.

Revolving Fund Limited

Section * (B), which, in effect, sets up a revolving fund, provides that any moneys collected from the disposition of defense articles under the bill may be used for two years to manufacture or procure other defense articles under the bill. The committee amendment terminates the use of the revolving fund on June 30, 1946.

There is no prohibition in the Constitution against such a revolving fund. Article 1, Section 8, Clause 12 of the Constitution confers power upon the Congress—

"To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years."

That Constitutional provision was intended to make impossible the maintenance of a large standing army except under the recurring surveillance of the Congress. The Federalist, No. XXVI. It does not apply, by its terms or interpretation, to the procurement of defense articles, which alone is contemplated by the bill here reported. (1904) 25 Op. Atty. Gen. 105. Prior instances of provisions for such revolving funds are many. See, for example, the requisitioning act of October 10, 1940 (Public Res. No. 829, Seventy-sixth Congress); the Aid-to-American-Republic Joint Resolution of June 15, 1940 (Public Res. No. 83, Seventy-sixth Congress).

Section 7 has already been discussed.

Section 8 authorizes the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy "to purchase or otherwise acquire arms, ammunition, and implements of war produced within the jurisdiction of any country to which Section 3 is applicable, whenever the President deems such purchase or acquisition to be necessary in the interests of the defense of the United States."

Section 9 authorizes the President to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper to carry out any of the provisions of the bill and to act through various government agencies.

TRAIN CHANGES PLANNED ON TUNNEL'S COMPLETION

Shimonoseki-Moji Project Will Become Important Link in Japan's System

A drastic change in train and ship schedules will be carried out when the Shimonoseki-Moji submarine tunnel, connecting Japan proper with Kyushu, opens at the end of next year, says Domei.

Construction work on the undersea tunnel was begun in the autumn of 1936. As the tunnel will become a great transportation link in East Asia, the Railways Ministry has decided to make a drastic change in train schedules on the occasion. Ferry routes will also be changed to bind stronger ties between Japan, Manchoukuo and China.

Officials from the Railways Ministry were recently sent to Korea and Manchoukuo to investigate schedule reforms. Upon their return, discussions concerning schedules will be held with representatives of the South Manchuria Railway, Korea Railways and railway officials from North and Central China.

They will discuss speeding up of trains from Nagasaki to Kagoshima, formation of a time schedule between Tokyo, Hsinking, Peking and Shanghai, increase of ferries between Shimonoseki and Moji, and a new ferry-route between Hakata and Reisui to be opened on 1943.

PARIS, March 20.—German and French automobile manufacturers have reached an agreement whereby French factories will engage in manufacturing almost exclusively four types of trucks ranging from one to four and half tons, it was announced here today.

Greater Control Seen

Domei

VICHY, March 13.—Stressing that "every Frenchman must have his place at the common table irrespective of his personal resources," Finance Minister Yves Bouthillier today announced in a nation-wide broadcast that the Government is determined to enlarge further the scope of its control over the French economic system.

The shortage of raw materials as a result of the blockade and transport difficulties had again reduced the work available in industries, he said, and consumption and prices must more than ever be submitted to the authority of the State.

"So long as production is below the normal demands of consumption, rationing of all essential products will be maintained and extended to a larger number of goods," he said.

Compelled to Rationing

While admitting that the enforcement of these measures entails many inconveniences and is a source of frequent abuses, Mr. Bouthillier stressed that the Government had been compelled to improvise a complicated system of food and raw materials rationing after the defeat.

"A sense of civic solidarity has compelled us to take measures aiming at the protection of the less fortunate classes of the population. No Frenchman could have tolerated that the weak should be crushed in distress," he added.

INDO-CHINA NOTED HOSTILE TO JAPAN

American and British Interests Said Maneuvering for Economic Control

French Indo-China is following a policy of procrastination in its economic negotiations with Japan, taking advantage of the increasing maneuvers by Britain and the United States, says a Nichi Nichi correspondent in Saigon. He states:

"Though Japan's position as the leader of East Asia has been stabilized much by the success of the Tokyo mediation conference, a speedy conclusion of a Japan-Indo-China economic parley is needed, whereas French Indo-China is procrastinating to gain favorable ground.

"Maneuvers of Britain and the United States directed toward French Indo-China have been intensified remarkably of late. And the French colony, which is suffering from a shortage of materials, appears to consider it advisable to continue its ambiguous attitude because of the British and American maneuvers.

"Particularly, southern French Indo-China is economically much dependent on Britain and America as large quantities of materials flow from these countries into Saigon. It is to be noted that the French colony is growingly confident that with the help of Britain and America it will be able to tide over the economic crisis and minimize Japan's pressure.

"Sea traffic with France, which had been cut at one time, was resumed in January, since when 10,000-ton vessels have been plying between the colony and France three times in two months. Two round-trips are made by French liners each month between Saigon and Singapore. Traffic between Saigon and Manila is irregular but continues.

"Through these channels are brought automobile parts, rubber goods, ironware, chemical products, foodstuffs, electrical apparatus, and miscellaneous goods.

"The Bank of French Indo-China is completely controled by financial circles in New York, Manila and London, where its gold reserves are held. The Saigon financial clique around the Bank of French Indo-China is therefore depending on Britain and America.

"One day's delay in the Japan-French Indo-China economic parley means one more day's plotting by Anglo-American circles. If the progress of the parley continues as slow as now, Japan may come to find it difficult to secure the desired results."

"The French Indo-China authorities are reluctant to permit Japanese to engage in business in that country, whereas Chinese appear to enjoy more protection," says a Nichi Nichi dispatch from Hanoi.

The South Seas Warehouse Company of Japan applied early in February for permission to engage in warehousing lighter service and canal traffic business in Haiphong. The application was turned down recently by the municipal office of that city.

A similar application by the Chinese tourist office at Haiphong, however, was accepted.

The Japanese are barred from the import and export associations. Unless such obstructions are removed, the Japanese economic advance in the French colony is impossible, even if a general economic accord is reached between the two countries, says the Nichi Nichi dispatch.

U.S. NAVY ASKS CONGRESS FOR CIVILIAN PATROLMEN

New Force Would Police Offshore Areas Instead of Marine Guards

Domei

WASHINGTON, March 18. — The Navy's request for a new civilian police force to replace Marine guards was aimed in part to meet situations in offshore areas such as Puerto Rico and new bases acquired from Britain where the navy has contact with native and civilian populations, reliable sources said today.

The House Appropriations Committee refused the Navy Department's request for funds to establish a civilian police force a month ago in connection with the supplementary defense bill.

Informed quarters said that the House Committee's action upset the Navy Department's plans.

According to reliable informants, the navy plan was based on experiences at Puerto Rico and other areas where Marine guards, accustomed to service in the United States, clashed with native residents. The informants added that the same situation, but to a much less marked degree, prevailed in Hawaii and the Philippines.

SOVIET INFLUENCE IN BALKANS AT END

Suppression of Communism in Bulgaria Believed Best Indication

TOPIC OF TALKS SHIELDED

But Observers Believe Eden and Saracoglu Concerned Over Jugoslavia's Position

I.N.S.

ANKARA, March 20.—It is authoritatively denied here that the Turkish General Staff has had conversations with the Jugoslav military authorities at Skopie.

Concerning the frequent reports of Soviet interest in Balkan developments, the view here is that the word "finis" already has been written to Soviet influence in the Balkans. It is pointed out in support of this view that no news favorable to the Soviet has appeared recently in the Bulgarian press, while a semi-official Bulgarian news agency writes words of praise for the new law which Minister of the Interior Gabrovsky already has steered through its first reading in the Bulgarian chamber and which increases the penalties and speeds up the prosecution of all "subversive elements" in Bulgaria.

This latter fact is held of great significance, for, although Bulgaria once so friendly with the Soviet is now definitely linked up with Germany, the suppression of Communism in Bulgaria hardly would have been embarked upon so definitely if Soviet influence had been regarded as of any great importance.

Jugoslavia Believed Issue

I.N.S.

ISTANBUL, March 20.—Little information is given in the official communique issued simultaneously in Ankara and Cairo regarding the interview in Cyprus between the British Foreign Secretary, Major Anthony Eden, and the Turkish Foreign Minister, Mr. Sukru Saracoglu, no mention being made of the subject of their talks.

Well-informed circles hold that since these two Ministers met and had a long conference only three weeks ago, there was no reason for the present talk unless it was to deal with some important change that subsequently had occurred in the Balkan situation. The only important change is the German-Jugoslav negotiations, and accordingly it is confidently assumed that Mr. Eden was sounding out the Turkish attitude in relation to that. In that case, it is held that Turkey's answers to Mr. Eden's questions would almost certainly have been non-committal.

NAZI CRUISERS ON RAIDS

Pocket Battleships Believed Responsible for British Losses

Domei

LONDON, March 21.—Two German pocket battleships have been carrying out raids on British shipping in the Atlantic and might have been responsible for the sinking of several merchant vessels during the last weekend, the Press Association declared today.

It was believed the 26,000-ton Scharnhorst and Gneisenau may have been the warships Prime Minister Winston Churchill referred to at the Pilgrams Society luncheon March 18, when he said that "German U-boats and battle cruisers have crossed to the American side of the Atlantic and have sunk ships as far west as the 42nd meridian."

STADIUM CHANGES PLANNED

Hanshin, Hankyu, Other Private Railway Companies Contemplate Scheme

In order to foster the health of the multitude, the Hanshin, Hankyu and other private railway companies are contemplating various innovations in the stadiums that lie in the respective lines, reports the Osaka Jiji.

The Koshien ground owned by the Hanshin Electric Tramways is spacious enough, but it was hitherto used mostly for baseball, rugby and other games limited to a certain number of players. In order to promote the health of the general public, a huge Butokuden to train military arts, and another large field for archery will be established shortly. Hankyu Electric Tramways, on the other hand, is planning to build a large gymnasium adjacent to the Nishinomiya baseball ground to promote indoor competitions. The Nankai Electric Railway Company is also contemplating building a gymnasium near Nakamozu baseball ground at an aggregate expenditure of about ¥45,000 while a large archery ground is being planned by the Kansai Kyuko Densha at Onchi.

Ford and Fisher Will Turn Out Warplanes for U.S.

Domei

WASHINGTON, March. 19.—The War Department announced last night that the Ford Motor Company and the Fisher Body division of the General Motors had agreed to construct $17,863,000 worth of new facilities for mass production of warplanes which will be assembled at a new mid-western plant. The contract with Ford involved approximately $11,000,000 for the construction of a plant in Michigan to manufacture parts for the Consolidated B-24 craft, which is a four-engined bomber. The Fisher Body Corporation will spend $6.875,000 to expand its facilities at Memphis, Tennessee, with 600,000 feet of additional floor space, the War Department said.

Express Trams, Buses Will Begin Operation April 1 in Order to Speed Up Traffic of City

The express system among tramcars and buses will be experimentally carried out throughout the city from April 1, says the Asahi.

The non-stop stations of tramcars and buses and other particulars of the express system will be decided on at a meeting to be held on Monday which will be attended by representatives from circles concerned.

At first the traffic section of the Metropolitan Police Board proposed a 40 per cent speed-up of the present speed of tramcars to the Municipal Electric Bureau. However, because of the reason of accidents arising from fast traffic and the hindrance in operation from the lack of tramcars, the proposition was refused as it would, on the contrary, bear undesirable results. As a result of discussions with the Metropolitan Police Board on March 16, the Municipal Electric Bureau agreed to a 20 per cent speeding up of the tramcars.

Express tramcars, which will be operated from April 1, will run from the hour of the first morning tramcar to 9 o'clock in the morning. They will be operated on all lines in the city. The system will be enforced in 13 bus lines running through the busy sections of the city. Five non-stop stations will be designated on each tram-line and eight non-stop stations on each bus line.

A drastic reform of automatic traffic signals will be carried out with the beginning of the express system among tramcars and buses in the city on April 1, it was decided by the traffic section of the Metropolitan Police Board.

Among the automatic traffic signals at 350 places in the city, signals at 10 places where there is little traffic will be abolished. Signals at 71 places with comparatively little traffic will only use the orange color for caution instead of the usual red, green and orange colors.

Signals at crossings and terminals will not be abolished nor decreased unless necessary. As the arrangement of the signals totals about one-fourth of the entire number in the city, it is expected that an increase in speed and electricity economy will be greatly attained by the means. However, on the other hand, the authorities are requesting further caution and co-operation of the citizens as the possibility of danger might become greater in this concern.

GERMANS DENY CHARGE OF BREAKING U.S. LAW

District Court Hears Case of Transocean Newsmen Held On Propaganda Charges

Domei

WASHINGTON, March 19.—Dr. Manfred Zapp, manager of the German Transocean news agency, and his assistant, Mr. Guenther Tonn, yesterday pleaded innocent when indicted in the United States District Court here on a charge of failing to comply with the 1938 foreign registration act.

The indictment charged that they were engaged in disseminating propaganda for a foreign country and "other activities of a political nature."

The complaint charged that Dr. Zapp had failed to register on time as a foreign agent and that Mr. Tonn had failed to register at all. It also charged that Dr. Zapp "fraudulently had omitted to state material facts" when he finally did register.

They were charged by the Federal Bureau of Investigation under the 1938 act requiring compulsory registrations of all foreign propaganda and political agents in the United States.

Mr. Martin Dies, head of the Committee investigating Un-American Activities, last night announced that he plans to ask the District Attorney of the District of Columbia to launch a Grand Jury investigation of the German-American Bund.

Mr. Dies, Democratic Representative of Texas, also said that he would ask the activities of the American Communist Party and "other foreign-controlled organizations" be investigated.

NEW WATER FIRE FORCE

Independent Corps Will Guard Against Blazes Along Tokyo Bay

An independent water firefighting force will be created by the Metropolitan Police Board against fires on and along Tokyo's waterways as well as in Tokyo harbor until autumn, says the Asahi.

The headquarters of the special force will be on reclaimed land at No. 3, Tsukishima, on the estuary of the Sumida River. It will have 13 firefighting boats. Firefighting stations will be built at strategic points along the waterways.

At present the Kyobashi police station is handling firefighting in Tokyo waters with only two firefighting boats. The new firefighting system is expected to be effective not only for boat fires but for land fires along the coast, canals and rivers in Tokyo, says the paper.

CENTRAL BANK OF CHINA IS RAIDED IN SHANGHAI

Nanking Political Police Search For Assassin of Banker Lo Tien-shu

Domei

SHANGHAI, March 22.—Acting swiftly to wind up the aftermath of the shooting affair in Shanghai's International Settlement yesterday in which Lo Tien-shu, assistant chief of the local office of the Central Reserve Bank of the National Government was murdered by an unidentified gunman in broad daylight, policemen from the Nanking Government's political police on Yuyuen Road, Western Shanghai, late last night raided the local office of the Central Bank of China, a Chungking institution, in the French Concession, which is suspected of hiding Chungking's terrorists.

Ninety-three Chinese clerks were taken into custody by the authorities for examination.

Thirty of them were released later while the rest are said to be undergoing rigorous examination at the hands of the police.

Meanwhile, the local British commercial commissioner appealed to the Chinese authorities to release the men, which was rejected by the police.

U.S. Oil Output Up

Domei

NEW YORK, March 20.—The American Petroleum Institute yesterday announced that oil production last week averaged 3,662,450 barrels daily. The total was 29,000 barrels more than the preceding week's production but 227,600 barrels less than production for the corresponding week last year.

MONGOLIA INDUSTRY SHOWS STEADY GAIN

Japanese Firms Now Holding ¥100,000,000 Investment—Agriculture Increases

Economic confidence is returning to Inner Mongolia after several years of hard effort to develop that vast land, Domei reports. Japanese business interests are steadily consolidating their foundation and industrial production has been gaining year by year, according to recent information.

When Inner Mongolia declared its independence immediately following the outbreak of the China affair, there was no business prosperity to speak of. The whole territory was as crude as can be imagined, though there was ample promise of industrial development based on its great natural resources. Today, Japan's total investments there are estimated at about ¥100,000,000. The news agency further describes the recent business condition there as follows:

"During the latter half of last year, the registered number of business companies in Inner Mongolia, which is inseparably related to Japan and Manchoukuo economically and in many other ways, reached 70 with an aggregate capitalization of ¥100,000,000. These numbers show a remarkable advance over the year before, thereby demonstrating the steady progress of the new order in that part of East Asia as in other parts.

Agriculture Output Up

AGRICULTURE: Partly due to favorable weather and partly as a consequence of the authorities' plan of productive power expansion, the agricultural crops for the current season as estimated at the end of the latter half of last year reached 1,326,000 tons, or a more than 20 per cent increase over average returns during many past years. In order to ensure proper distribution of agricultural products for domestic consumption and for export trade, the Mongolian Federated Association of the Agricultural Unions has recently been called into existence.

STOCK-BREEDING: A 5-year plan of sheep raising was formulated toward the end of last year according to which 91,000 head of sheep will be imported so as to bring the total of the sheep on the Mongolian pasturages to 269,000 and to turn out therefrom some 5,000,000 tons of wool each year.

MINERAL OUTPUT: The difficulties attendant on an attempt to develop the mineral resources in Mongolia owing to an inadequate supply of labor and materials have been gradually overcome, with the establishment of the Mongolian Mineral Products Company whose business it is to ensure proper supply of materials and fair distribution of the products.

Construction Holds

CIVIL ENGINEERING: The required restriction of non-urgent enterprises, control of capitalization, scarcity of materials, and the consequent appreciation of general prices have considerably hurt civil engineering activities in Mongolia during the period under consideration. Still the value of the public construction work taken in hand during the later half of last year at the four greatest cities of Kalgan, Tatung, Hohua, and Paotow, exceeded ¥16,000,000 or ¥20,000,000 inclusive of the returns for the preceding half.

INDUSTRIAL COMPANIES; Among the leading industrial companies established during the period under notice were the Mongolian Mineral Products Company capitalized at ¥2,000,000, the Mongolian Chemical Industry Company, and the Mongolian Fiber Industry Company. Those Companies whose capital was paid in during the period in question included the Mongolian Electro-Communications Company, Mongolian Railway, Oriental Tobacco, Mongolian Cement, and the Mongolian Stock-Breeding companies. The total number of the leading business companies as registered at the end of last year was 70 with the aggregate capitalization of ¥158,930,000.

FOREIGN TRADE: The total imports made overland during last year aggregated ¥159,000,000 and the total of exports ¥115,000,000, thereby registering an excess of import over export to the amount of ¥43,000,000. Comparison with the preceding year shows that the above means an increase by ¥36,600,000 or 30 per cent in imports, and ¥25,000,000 or 28 per cent in exports with an excess of import over export increased by ¥11,600,000 yen.

MARKET PRICES: The commodity prices have been upward for some time past, the index of average prices in the four leading cities above mentioned standing at 218.5. This, as compared with the preceding half of the same year, indicates an increase by 34.8. The general tone remained more stabilized during the latter half than during the first half of last year.

NAVY STRESSES HAINAN IS LIFELINE OF JAPAN

Operations on Island Described In Communique Issued by South China Fleet

Domei

HAIKOU, March 21.—Starting operations early in February in southeast Hainan Island, the Japanese now are intensifying an attack against Chinese troops there who have been greatly affected by shortage of supplies owing to the recent Japanese blockade and the continued friction between the Kuomintang and the Communists, the Japanese fleet in South China waters announced at 4 o'clock this afternoon. Importance of Hainan Island as a Japanese strategic base in the South is increasing, the communique states, adding that the island is a lifeline for the Japanese Empire which is seeking resources for national defense.

Japanese troops, which started operations in Kachek and Chinglan, occupied Penglai, Huangchu, Lungmen and Lingkou on March 13 and Hanlin on March 15. Meanwhile, another unit took Linglun and, after breaking through jungles and crossing the Nantu River, captured Shihfu on March 14.

Formations of naval bombers attacked Nanai, headquarters of General Wang I's army, causing heavy losses to the Chinese.

IMPERIAL HOME LOCATED

Study Society Decides Ancestors Had Capital in Hida

The Mythical Age Cultural Study Society at Takayama, Hida Province, in Gifu Prefecture, holding a large meeting recently, concluded that Takamagahara, or the capital of the Imperial ancestors, was located somewhere in Hida, the roof of Japan. This conclusion was reached as a result of archaeological research conducted by members of the society, according to Domei.

Mr. Hikichi Futaguchi director of the Sasagatake Mining Company, Takayama, is one of those most ardently advocating the theory. Before the society makes its public announcement in the form of a book on this subject, which has remained a mystery so far, it will continue its research work three more years.

Popular Raccoon Dogs

There are two burrowing mammals that are most popular in Japanese folklore and fairy tales. One is the fox and the other is the "tanuki" or raccoon dog, sometimes misleadingly translated badger. The former is represented, as in western literature, as very cunning and is credited even with such a degree of craftiness that it can make fools of men particularly those who have too obvious a weakness for the fair sex. The raccoon, however, is regarded as a better-natured animal and not without a sense of humor. It is supposed to have as much skill as the fox in transforming itself, at its will and is generally represented as standing on its hind legs, with a wine jug in hand and wearing a big piece of headgear. The animal is said to metamorphose itself into a monk and patronize a wine shop when dusk deepens or when the moon comes out to shed its enchanting beams on the woods.

The raccoon dog is one of the species whose breeding was recently encouraged in this country, under the impact of wartime economics. The first species to be taken up for such a purpose was the rabbit; the second, the weasel; third, the silver and other breeds of fox; and then the raccoon dog. This new form of stock farming developed through a systematic campaign of publicity which made it generally known how easy it was to raise raccoon dogs and how lucrative to sell them for their furs.

This publicity campaign proved so successful that the breeding of raccoon dogs was taken up in many rural places with high hopes verging on enthusiasm. Their popularity was nowhere higher than in the northeastern provinces where there are more lands available for stock farms and less attractive opportunities for high priced farm crops like rice and wheat. Demands for the animal grew apace. Raccoon dogs whose value had hitherto been vaguely placed anywhere from five to ten yen apiece rose in value by leaps and bounds. In 1937 or thereabout the current market quotations were three or four hundred yen for a pair no larger than medium size dogs. An all-time peak price was registered in 1938 when a pair of raccoon dogs fetched something like ¥600.

Then something happened. In 1939 the value of raccoon dogs began to crash down with a proportionally shrinking demand. As the demand for the animals shrank so they themselves began to shrink in girth as it was found that it cost too much to feed them. This was not surprising when it was found in many parts of the country that even chickens, unless they laid golden eggs, could not be counted on the right side of the abacus.

It was rather fortunate, however, that rural investment was not confined to these dogs, for the raccoon dog market seemed to have had the bottom knocked out of it. In the closing part of last year they were quoted at no higher than five paltry yen a pair. It was disastrous to have anything to do with the devaluated, uneconomical beasts. Then people remembered what they had read in a fairy tale, which told how an old man living in the countryside, and he not necessarily of a particularly brutal disposition, once found reason to pounce upon a raccoon dog and make soup of it. The idea at least had a practical aspect that was not to be lightly dismissed.

The economic pendulum swung back, with a vengeance. The knell was tolled for raccoon dogs the flesh of which began to flow to market in increasing streams. This trend was accentuated by the price for raccoon dog furs being fixed at ¥20 apiece, whereas it had less than a year ago been as high as ¥120 and sometimes almost ¥150.

The authorities, who are determined to make their list for price control as comprehensive as scientific, lost little time in encouraging the use of raccoon dog meat in family kitchens. Its use was chiefly encouraged as a substitute for beef, pork and chicken. On January 15 last the price of the meat was officially fixed at 45 sen per unit retail and ¥4.20 per 12 pounds wholesale. It is evident that it is of no less commercial value than horse meat, which is to be had for about the same cost.

The raccoon dogs are collected and dealt with exclusively through the hands of the Japan Fur Control Company which, in turn, transfers the fleshy parts of the animals to the Japan Fishery Company. There the meat is put through a process of refrigeration in order to get rid of its peculiar odor. Then it is ready to be sold to meat processing plants in all parts of the country. It is said that the raccoon meat thus processed, "as good to taste as horseflesh," is supplied to ham, sausage and mince ball manufacturers.

The number of raccoon dogs in the country was given at some 200,000 last autumn. The total number slaughtered during last year for export and domestic use was estimated at some 50,000. It means that there were not inconsiderable meat supplies from this source. It is likewise clear that meat factories in the country are still dependent on the usual sources of supply to no small extent. However, it is encouraging to learn that raccoon meat, if properly treated and cooked, would pass for duck meat any time and anywhere.

But the rural inhabitants who have made miscalculations about the value of this animal are bitterly disappointed. Through their recent experience they know, to their chagrin and their cost, that fairy tales are not sometimes so fantastic as they are supposed to be. For in Japanese folklore there is no dearth of men and women who came to grief because they knew not the uncanny power of the fox and the raccoon dog. They have vain regrets when they feel that they would have done better if they had in good time remembered the old hunters' warning, "not to count raccoon dog skins before they are caught."

American Indian Art

Increased understanding and appreciation of the art of the Indian and his aims and problems of adjustment in an alien civilization should result from the current Exhibition of Indian Art at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City. It has been organized by the Indian Arts and Crafts Board of the United States Department of the Interior in collaboration with universities and museums throughout the country.

The beauty, integrity and vitality of Indian artistry comes as a revelation in this cross-section of cultural achievement of the Indian in the various parts of North America. These finest examples of many techniques displayed in basketry, weaving, pottery, wood sculpture, painting on skins, beaded and quilled work on skins, sand painting, jewelry, and murals on underground ceremonial chambers extend back over the last fifteen hundred years and even to prehistoric times.

The exhibition seeks to disclose the adaptability of Indian art and fabrics to contemporary fashions and interiors. Since fine art, in the sense of art for art's sake, is a concept almost unknown in Indian cultures, and contemporary art is wisely following in the functional footsteps of our first artists, it is to be hoped that any modern adaptation will avoid mere savagery of color and design, adhere to the simple beauty of the indigenous art of America, and so help toward a keener appreciation of its qualities.—Christian Science Monitor.

Harvests Versus Record Crops

The unusual climatic conditions of last winter and spring have affected the crops of the whole world in many and varied ways. The world production of grain has seldom found such a big regional deviation as in this year. The two countries of North America are piling up large surpluses to add to their already large stores. Australia had a small harvest, but it, too, has large reserves. The Argentine had a record corn crop, with the result that the Government is seriously urging burning up of the surplus. In Europe, the wheat crop is only fair to middling, as compared to that overseas, even in the Danube basin, which ordinarily exports large quantities wheat. But it must not be forgotten that Europe is the greatest producer of rye, feed gains, potatoes and sugar-beets. Root plantings have brought in record harvests everywhere this year. The supply of grain for bread is safe; feed is also stored away in abundance, because of the good harvests in potatoes and sugar-beets. Europe can get along without grain from overseas, but England is always more acutely cut off from all its imports.

MALE MOTION PICTURE PLAYERS OUTSHINE FEMALE IN HOLLYWOOD

Their Popularity Differs But Actor Is More Important Than Actress by Box-Office Returns

By BOSLEY CROWTHER

N.Y. Times

Four out of five persons questioned as to the relative magnitude of film stars would in all probability conjecture that the screen is dominated by its queens, for the impression has long been prevalent that the female performers "pack the sock." Indeed, the very term, "Hollywood movie star," most frequently calls to mind the glittering image of a glamour-drenched coryphee, silken-clad and transcendent in shape—a creature of feminine gender as indubitable as Mother Eve. But ask any one in the business which is the screen's most consistently popular sex and they'll answer that the laurels go to the male.

Axiom Based on Returns

This isn't guesswork, either. It is is an axiom based upon returns form the most responsive and reliable voting machines available—the box-offices of the land. True, the patrons here register their individual preferences unconsciously, seldom aware that they are making a fundamental choice. But the industry follows closely the trends of mass response. And that is why one of the most eagerly watched tallies, from the professional point of view, is the nation-wide box-office poll made annually by the Quigley trade publications to determine the relative drawing power of stars as indicated by gross receipts.

Chivalry may be violated by the cold realism of this poll, but in every year since 1934 (excepting 1938, when the score was tied) it has clearly disclosed predominance of masculine stars among the box-office toppers. And the returns for 1940, which have recently been published, brought forth the illusion-shattering information that the eight leading favorites last year were all of the masculine variety, that the gentler sex rated no higher than ninth and tenth places in the "top ten." Furthermore, nine of the fifteen succeeding point scorers were males. Thus the sons of Adam have a better than two-to-one majority over the daughters of Eve among the twenty-five leaders.

This overwhelming pre-eminence of the male in popular favor last year was just a bit surprising even to the industry, it is true, but seasoned theater men have a simple and basic explanation for it. Discounting for the moment the individual quality of the pictures in which the stars appeared (and on the receipts from which the exhibitors rated the players' popularity), there remains the established fact that the American filmgoers' tastes are largely determined by the female customers. And the females, through a fundamental urge which dates from the Garden of Eden, have a strong predilection for the masculine performers.

Experienced showmen know that, as the women go, so goes the nation. They have worked on that premise for years. For who, they confidently inquire, pay most attention to "show stuff"—men or women? Who read the "fan" magazines? Who are most responsive to glamour? Who picks the attraction when a couple is off to see a movie of an evening? Who spreads the "word of mouth" reports by which pictures largely prosper or fail? It's the sweethearts and mothers of the land. That is as basic as the concept of male intuition.

Woman's First Interest

So, the old showman will tell you, is the preference for masculine stars. Women see all they want of other women without going to the movies, the argument runs, but a handsome, romantic man is something else again. And nowhere else can one see them as up there on the screen. A woman's first interest in an actress is inspired by curiosity—by a normal feminine inquisitiveness into the secret of another's attraction. The actress, as Terry Ramsaye, historian of the films, has said, is mainly a "clinical specimen" for the female customers to probe—a fellow female parading her manners, her dress and her emotions for critical judgment. But an actor is of the opposite sex, and that puts the whole thing on a level much more easily understood. The standards of judgment immediately change.

As evidence of this distinction the showman might logically point to the 1940 list of box-office favorites. The leading eight, in order, were Mickey Rooney, Spencer Tracy, Clark Gable, Gene Autry, Tyrone Power, James Cagney, Bing Crosby and Wallace Beery. Except for Messrs. Rooney and Beery, these actors are all romantic types, the possessors of assorted sex appeal. It might even be argued that the two exceptions strike some soft, responsive chord in female hearts. On the other hand, the two women who were named among the top ten were Bette Davis and Judy Garland—the first a highly accomplished actress who is better known for her dramatic intensity than for her romantic appeal, and the other a burgeoning maiden whose fortes, as yet, are her voice and her youthful vivacity. (The next female star on the list, incidentally, was Deanna Durbin, in twelfth place.)

Thus do the theater men reason, and the immediate facts would seem to bear them out. In the nine years in which the Quigley poll has been taken the majority of male leaders have been romantic types. Clark Gable, for instance, has been among the top ten every year; Spencer Tracy, Tyrone Power, Bing Crosby, James Cagney and Robert Taylor have come within the charmed circle three times each. And the most frequent scorer among the female stars, with six tallies in the top ten, has been—this is the pay-off!—Shirley Temple.

Romance Not Figured

But even an old showman will agree that there are other factors to be considered than just plain sex, and the greater box-office pull of male stars has not been accounted wholly on that score. For instance, Wallace Beery has hit the top ten five times—second only to Mr. Gable as the most consistent repeater among the masculine group; Will Rogers made the list four times running before his untimely death, and even Joe E. Brown and young Mr. Rooney have been on three times each. Certainly the element of romance has not figured prominently in the popularity of these gentlemen.

In other words, the female customers—plus their escorts and the children in the house—likewise go strong for comedy and the humor of good old homely characters. As evidence it should be noted that the top favorites during the past nine years have been Marie Dressler twice, Mr. Rogers once, Mistress Temple four times and young Mr. Rooney twice.

Furthermore, as parallel evidence, one is compelled to observe that, while male stars likewise dominated the list of favorites in Great Britain last year, the majority of them were straight and exceedingly unromantic character actors—fellows like George Formby, the horsefaced Lancashire lad; Arthur Askey, a lantern-jawed comic, and Charles Laughton, who need not be described. And there is no especial reason to assume that British ladies are any less susceptible to handsome males than American ladies are.

In a closer analysis, then, the further fact becomes apparent that much of a star's popularity, from year to year, depends upon the quality of the films in which he or she appears. The Quigley returns are affected directly by the money which passes into the box-office till, and even the most popular performer can't draw big receipts in poor pictures. For instance, Alice Faye made the top ten in 1938 and 1939, the years in which she appeared in such successful films as "In Old Chicago," "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "Rose of Washington Square." Last year, without a big hit, she dropped down to thirteenth place. Of course, the academic question might here be raised as to what makes a hit—the story or the star. But most of the experts agree that it generally takes a combination of both.

A Tough One to Answer

And now intrudes another consideration in this tug-of-war between the male and female stars. In the long run, do the males get a better "break" than the females in top roles? That is a tough one to answer, and a court of critics could wrangle over it for weeks. But producers usually find that it is harder to spot acceptable leading men than leading women. And this fact obviously gives the men a decided initial advantage.

The reason for this circumstance may be a shade obscure. But, reduced to fundamentals, the explanation would seem to be that fewer personable men are temperamentally inclined to the acting profession and, therefore, attractive male stars are rarer than the female counterparts. This dilemma is most startlingly reflected upon the legitimate stage, where one can almost count on the fingers of one hand the big-name actors who possess a considerable package of sex appeal, while the number of attractive actresses is much less limited.

In short, almost any stout young man with good looks and a fair amount of talent who turns up on Broadway or in Hollywood can usually write his own ticket at the studios, while a young actress, even with looks, has to struggle much harder for a chance. Likewise, let a good-looking boy make a fairly presentable showing in his first picture and his immediate elevation to a top role is automatically assured. But an actress seldom reaches the top except by laborious stages.

Popularity of Male, Female Stars

And this brings us back to the original precept that the popularity of male stars depends largely upon the amount of romance that is compounded in their personalities, while the popularity of a female depends upon talent or something else. The actresses know this, too, for there are many "name" stars among them who refuse to make a picture unless they are teamed with a popular leading man. Of course, they innocently pretend that this requirement is justified by their own professional rank, but persons on the inside know full well that it is a calculated way to insure themselves at the box-office.

It is true that there was a time—back in 1932, 1933 and 1934—when the so-called "glamour girls" were showing up well in the Quigley poll. Joan Crawford, for instance, was a leader for five years, from 1932 to 1936; and Norma Shearer, Jean Harlow, Janet Gaynor, Claudette Colbert and Mae West scored now and then. But those days are gone. Perhaps the passing of the depression was influential in some recondite way. The psychologists might reason that out. But, regardless of how one explains it, the masculine stars are incontestable leaders today. Boy meets girl, as usual, but the girl is in the shade. Or, as Mr. Kipling might have put it, the female of the species scores less steadily than the male.

A State University

It is too bad that Mr. H. C. Byrd did not take the time to define precisely the field in which he hopes to have the University of Maryland operate.

The University of Maryland is more than a mere educational institution. It performs, in addition, many functions of governmental administration, and Mr. Byrd has indicated that he would like to perform more. Some thoughtful people believe Mr. Byrd has already gone too far in this direction. They fear the possible creation at College Park of an administrative agency far beyond the reach of the voter and even of the regularly elected officials. They would prefer to see the university an agency apart from politics and governmental administration and in a position where it could give objective criticism and advice.

Mr. Byrd sees no reason why the university should not discharge administrative duties. Witness his attempt to take in and subordinate the state department of forestry.—Baltimore Sun.

SWISS NOW MUST FARM TO ASSURE FOOD SUPPLY

New Decree Issued to Intensify Agricultural Activity

Christian Science Monitor

BERN, Switzerland.—With food reserves dwindling, and external trade being gradually choked off, the peasant farmer in Switzerland is assuming an ever more vital role in the national economy.

This is reflected in a Government decree published in February to intensify Swiss farming activity and increase this democracy's degree of self-sufficiency. With the purpose of putting thousands of additional workers on farms, the new decree gives the Government power to prevent farm workers from leaving the farm, compels unemployed persons to work on farms, and provides for the transfer of non-essential industrial workers of agriculture in some instances.

Shortage Guarded

This is one of the latest measures that the Swiss have taken to guard against any possible serious food shortage. At the present time food is scarce in Switzerland, with the result that rationing and conservation of existing supplies is being increasingly enforced.

Recently bakers have been asked to experiment with potato flour as a possible substitute for the imported grains. This flour closely resembles corn starch. Hotel chefs sometimes use it to thicken puddings, but aside from that there is slight demand for the product. Already the price has advanced so much that it is feared bread baked from the flour will be prohibitive. And undoubtedly potatoes, up to now plentiful and reasonably priced, will also scar to the upper brackets.

Each month the ration cards are eagerly scanned for changes. Those issued for January have 50 grams less of fat, 50 grams less of cooking and salad oil, 250 grams less of sugar, and 500 grams less of flour (mixed, not white). However, the "teigwaren"—spaghetti products—have been increased from 250 grams to 500 grams. Often shops cannot replenish depleted stocks of imported goods and it is no longer unusual to have a clerk carefully scrape a drawer for the last half pound say of corn meal or English currants.

Returning soldiers home on furlough tell of the generous cheese allotments given out to them each day, showing that the army is considered as perhaps one field where rationing cannot be too strict. Thus the Government must look to the farmers for heavier milk production to satisfy cheese factories, whose entire output is absorbed by this new mass of consumers.

New Regulations

Of recent new regulations, there is one that forbids hotels to serve "rosti kartoffel"—boiled potatoes chopped and fried in a golden brown pancake—promulgated in the effort to save cooking fats. Bakers, who were rationed some months ago to 20 per cent of former cream quotas, were suddenly notified over the radio that they could no longer use whipped cream or butter cream fillings in any of their goods. However, some concession was made regarding bread, as the widely predicted rationing of this product in January did not materialize. This was partly due to the authorities' belief that by limiting an individual's amount the gross sales might greatly increase. For light bread eaters would probably buy more than otherwise in order to use their quotas.

A people, closely knit under the duress of wartime conditions, must temporarily forsake many privileges in the effort to establish a government capable of resisting the pressures brought to bear against it. Farmers this spring will be told the crops to plant, regimenting the nation's agriculture.

SHIZUKO SANEYOSHI APPEARS WITH CHUO

Talented Pianist Makes Her Debut With Orchestra Last Night

GIVES FINE IMPRESSION

Gurlitt Takes Role of Conductor-Pianist in Mozart 2-Piano Concerto

By I. J. Fisher

The New Symphony Orchestra was heard last night in its 14th subscription concert under the baton of Professor Manfred Gurlitt. It was very evident that students are usually the chief attendants at concerts because now being the school holiday period the large Hibiya Public Hall was but half-filled.

The program, not one to create much excitement, opened with von Weber's Overture to the opera Oberon. Mozart's Concerto in E flat major for Two Pianos followed with Miss Shizuko Saneyoshi at the first piano, and Mr. Gurlitt at the second instrument as well as conducting the orchestra. Liszt's tone-poem, Bergsinfonie, was given as a finale.

Oberon Overture fared very well in the first half when the horn solo was nicely intoned and the string passages given with delicacy and a warm, mellow tone. The dancing-down passages of the woodwinds, later repeated by the strings, was an appealing and pretty touch so mindful of the light tripping of the elves depicted in the opera. In the second section the drums and brasses were too strong and obscured the finer details of the rushing passages by the strings. Also the interpretation in the second half lacked feeling, imagination, and understanding of the opera plot. It was rendered, as the conductor demanded, more like a spirited martial piece and lost its meaning.

It is a difficult matter for a conductor to do two jobs, leading and piano soloist. However, allowing for the double role, the Mozart Concerto came off fairly well if not entirely pleasing. The conductor rushed the first movement with undue speed each time he was at the piano and this led to faulty orchestra response. The first violin section was flat often and in bowing lacked lightness. In the andante movement the often heard oboe was quite out of pitch, and in a few pizzicati tones the second strings plucked so unnecessarily hard as to produce more of a clang than a pleasing musical tone.

The two pianos gave forth a pleasingly romantic interpretation to the Andante and the scale of dynamics was well-wrought. The first pianist was careful in pointing and phrasing but the second piano part would have been improved with a more caressing touch and less of the spirit of unrest and hurry. Again in the Rondo there was unneeded hurry and many running passages of the second piano in the final Allegro could have been more clearly articulated.

Miss Saneyoshi, a comparative newcomer, impressed with her touch and tone, and she possesses facile technic and has talent which seems to have been well directed in her training.

Liszt's programmatic tone-poem is a somewhat trashy bit of music in which the composer makes the best impression by his use of instrumental coloring rather than subject matter. The music pictures the moods and impressions of a mountain: the gentle and wild, calm and storm, festive and religioso in its chorale-like figure. The orchestra responded well to the conductor's desires here, and the general effect was wrought with skill and very pleasing. The first violin in its pastorale solo was not always true to pitch. The brass choir intoned well the thematic figure assigned to it, and the harp succeeded in giving the effect of bubbling water.

The program was well received, and Miss Saneyoshi warmly applauded for her effective rendition, while Conductor Gurlitt modestly gave the honors to the young soloist and his ensemble.

SHANGHAI, March 24.—Dr. Chu Min-yi, Chinese Ambassador to Japan, now en route to Nanking to participate in the coming celebration of the first anniversary of the return of the National Government to Nanking, arrived here this afternoon aboard the Yawata Maru. After stopping overnight here, Mr. Chu is due to leave for Nanking.

Dr. Chu Min-yi, Chinese Ambassador to Japan, and a Chinese mission consisting of newspaper reporters headed by Mr. Chao Mu-ju, sailed for home from Kobe on Saturday by Yawata Maru.

The Chinese Minister is going back temporarily to participate in the celebration of the first anniversary of the return of National Government to Nanking and is expected back in Japan within three weeks. The group of journalists came to Japan some time ago at the invitation of the Japan Tourist Bureau and visited in Tokyo, Nagoya, Ise, Kyoto; Osaka and Kobe during their sojourn. They were seen off by the Chinese Consul-General at Kobe and many Japanese and Chinese dignitaries.

DACCA, March 20.—Nine persons were reported killed and 87 wounded in communal clashes arising out of a bazaar brawl leading to arson here yesterday.

The police had to resort to firing on the mob, who were attempting to set fire to a shop. Nine persons were wounded in the shooting.

The Chinese players have just ended a tour of Shansi Province where they gave plays to enlighten the people on the ideals of the Co-prosperity Sphere in New Asia which Japan is fostering.

WEALTH OF SIBERIA AWAITING JAPANESE

Vast Materials Seen Obtainable By Barter System From Soviet Territory

Urging the need of Soviet-Japanese economic co-operation, Mr. Teiichi Muto, well-known political commentator, states that Japan could buy vast quantities of necessary materials on barter system from Siberia if Japan and Siberia are placed in one bloc, in his article which appears in the Hochi.

Mr. Muto at the same time draws attention of the public to the fact that the rich natural resources in Siberia are now being rapidly explored by the Soviet Union with the views to establishing a highly organized national defense structure.

"The sorts of natural resources necessary to the world vary in accordance with the shifts in the world situations and with the progress of world civilization," he says. "And no one can foresay what kind of new natural resources could be necessary in the future. The problem of development of natural resources still remains a task of tomorrow.

"Even from the angle of the present standard of civilization, there remain vast areas not yet, developed, where great quantities of resources are lying. It is not only America which possesses rich natural resources. Siberia, for instance, has unlimited quantities of resources unearthed since the creation of the world.

Rich Continent

"The rich continent has been untouched only because of the lack of means of exploring the resources.

"We, however, must open our eyes to the fact that the Soviet Union is now exerting efforts for exploiting Siberian resources with accelerated speed.

"Hitherto we looked on the United States as the 'State of Today' and the Soviet as a 'State of Tomorrow.' But the Soviet Union has become a 'State of Today' in every sense of the word and it is due to the remarkable development of the natural resources on the part of the Soviet Union.

"The Soviet's scheme of developing the natural resources means nothing but the speedy establishment of a heavy industrial belt, which, in other words, is the establishment of a highly-organized national defense structure.

"The progress of the Soviet in completing its national defense structure is a wonder of the world along with the United States of America. According to reliable statistics, the Soviet soldiers in 1938 numbered 7,500,000, which was five times as many as they were 10 years before. Now, the Soviet soldiers are estimated to number more than 10,000,000.

"As for tanks, they increased from 1,000 to 30,000 during the past ten years, and planes from 3,000 to 30,000 during the same period.

"It is the Soviet Union which has the greatest number of submarines in the world, it is said. They are said to amount to approximately 400.

"Apart from the quality of these arms, it is only because the Soviet has rich natural resources that the Union could expand its armament to such a remarkable extent, with surprising rapidity. The more the efficiency of the heavy industry is increased, the more rapidly would the national resoures be developed, and consequently the more consolidated would be the power of the mechanized troops of the Soviet.

"While Japan is gazing across the waters at its front foor, the rich natural resources at the back of the Empire are being hurriedly explored.

"If Japan could place Siberia in one economic bloc, Japan will be able to buy from Siberia 10,000,000 tons of iron and millions of tons of oil annually at least, on the barter system. Here lies the most important point of adjusting Japanese-Soviet economic relations."

83 % of Americans Against Entering European Conflict

NEW YORK, March 22.—"If you were asked to vote on the question of the United States going to war or staying out, how would you vote?" This, the latest question to be put by the Gallup survey, revealed that 17 per cent of those asked favored going to war, 83 per cent favored staying out. The figures show a 2 per cent increase of those favoring going to war compared to the last similar poll. The South showed the largest percentage favoring war, while the West and central agricultural districts were the lowest.

Axis War Veterans To Form Close Bond

Germany, Italy and Japan have concluded an agreement for the exchange of information pertaining to their respective activities, it was disclosed today.

According to the understanding, the National Socialist Kriegerbund, the Associazione Nationale and the Nippon Zaigo Gunjin Kai—ex-soldiers' organizations of Germany, Italy and Japan respectively—will publish in their periodicals news concerning their fellow organizations. The Associazione Nationale reportedly already has begun a series of articles on the German ex-servicemen's association.

Meanwhile, the latest issue edited by the National Socialist Kriegerbund published the text of telegrams exchanged between General Ikutaro Inouye, head of the Japanese ex-soldiers' group, and General Reinhard, chief of the Kriegerbund. The messages by the two leaders strongly emphasize the need for closer collaboration among ex-servicemens' organizations of Germany, Italy and Japan.

KANNON STATUE ARRIVES

Replica of Goddess of Mercy Reaches Nanking After 11 Days' Trip

A huge statue of Kannon, Goddess of Mercy, about 33 feet high and weighing 24,000 pounds, which was presented by the Reverend Zenkai Omori, chief abbot of the Sodo sect, in the name of Buddhists in Japan to the National Government at Nanking, safely arrived at Nanking after 11 days' journey, says the Asahi.

The shipping expenses of the statue, carried on board the Shoei Maru of the Toa Shipping Company, cost about ¥10,000.

RIGHTIST PARTIES UNION IS FORESEEN

Trends Reveal Nationalist Leaders May Join Forces for Common Cause

The unification of rightist groups in this country numbering more than 300 will be realized earlier than generally expected with the possible tie-up of the "big three" of the nationalist circles, says the Kokumin.

They are Mr. Mitsuru Toyama, superpatriot and great leader of the nationalist movement, Mr. Tatsuo Amano, leader of the God-sent Troops Party, who has just been discharged from punishment at the Supreme Court trial, and Mr. Nissho Inouye, who played a leading role in the famous May 15 Incident of 1932.

Signs of unification of rightist groups were seen when a number of rightist leaders including Colonel Kingoro Hashimoto, president of the former Dai-Nippon Seinento, Mr. Seigo Nakano, president of the Tohokai, Baron Iwakusu Ida, member of the House of Peers, joined the New Structure Committee when it was formed last autumn.

Such a trend was accelerated when Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma, who is also a leader of the nationalist movement, participated in the Konoye Cabinet as a State Minister at the close of last year.

There is a factor hampering the unification of the rightist groups, however. The nationalist circle of this country has been divided into many factions due to the fact that rightists are united only through comradeship rather than ideology.

With the new national structure being consolidated, however, they have come to awake to the necessity of their complete unification.

The recent establishment of the Throne Aid Youth League, led by Mr. Taku Mikami, who played a very important role in the May 15 Incident, the Youth Council of Japan led by Mr. Toyama, and the Kokumin-Doshikai, led by Mr. Tanenori Iriye, is considered to have suggested the direction toward which the nationalist camps are to be unified.

If a tie-up between Mr. Toyama, Mr. Amano and Mr. Inouye is possible, the unification of the nationalist groups will be realized at a rapid pace, concludes the journal.

SAIGON DISPLEASED WITH TOKYO TALKS

Dissatisfaction Very Evident in Contrast to Peaceful Hanoi

There prevails an unusual atmosphere at Saigon where troops of French Indo-China are marching from street to street in a demonstrative manner, report correspondents of the Asahi who reached there recently from Hanoi.

Dissatisfaction of the French people with the result of the Tokyo peace conference on the Thai-French Indo-China border issue seems to be deep in Saigon in contrast to Hanoi where an amicable atmosphere prevails.

"We left Hanoi on the evening of March 17 for Saigon by the special express which starts from Hanoi at 6:30 o'clock in the evening daily. On the same train was an investigation party of seven members of the Commerce and Industry Ministry of Japan and 15 other Japanese passengers.

"With the moving of the train, scenes outside the carriage window came to take in the aspect of the torrid zone. We saw farmers harvesting rice at Hue, the seat of the capital of Annam, when we had seen rice-plants only five inches in height at Hanoi 16 hours ago.

"French women who wore boas over their shoulders when taking the train at Hanoi changed to summer dresses. We also changed our clothes to yukata. At Hue, Mr. Matsuhisa Ninomiya, 65-year-old Japanese trader at Tourane, Annam, boarded the train, and he was frantic with joy on finding so many Japanese in the carriage.

Fertile Plain

"The train traversed a fertile plain which was well cultivated as far as we could see. Then the train approached mountainous regions, where, according to Mr. Ninomiya, are roaming tigers, leopards and other fierce animals.

"In parallel with the railway ran a fine road from the border between China and French Indo-China to Saigon via Hanoi, and then to the border between French Indo-China and Thailand. This road is 6,000 kilometers in distance.

"On the following day, the weather became hotter and hotter.

"When we reached Saigon, we felt that something unusual prevailed in that city. At Hanoi Japanese residents have increased in number since the peaceful advancement of Japanese troops last autumn and the atmosphere is amicable, whereas in Saigon the dissatisfaction of the French people with the result of the Tokyo peace conference seems to be evident.

"Arguments appearing in the Saigon press express dissatisfaction with the Governor-General. The majority of troops of French Indo-China are stationed at Saigon. They are demonstrating daily in streets of Saigon."

LOST-FOUND GOODS MEET VARIED FATE

Some Are Returned to Owners But Other Do Not Fare So Happily

Lost articles in Tokyo are meeting varied fates, according to the Kokumin, which reveals a few cases that the paper gathered here and there in the capital. According to the survey, some are very easily claimed because of the honesty of the finder but others come back very reluctantly into the hands of the absent-minded owners.

A Fukagawa Ward taxi-driver, Mr. Mr. Haruhei Katsumata, found last Tuesday a moneybag containing ¥490.10 and immediately took it to a nearby police station. The bag, it was soon revealed, belonged to Mr. Kiyoshi Chiba, dyer of Hachioji, in Tokyo Prefecture, and had been left by one of his bill-collectors while making the rounds.

Mr. Chiba, overjoyed at the report of the finding, proceeded to the police station and arranged with the police that 20 per cent of the sum be sent to the Sogo Taxi Company as reward for the honest taxi-driver. However, the taxi-driver refused to take the money, his reason being, "I acted as I should have acted, and there's nothing more to it."

Not So Honest

Quite different in nature was the case which occurred about a week before when Mr. Saburo Hatsuya of Adachi Ward found at the entrance of Tokyo Station a pocketbook containing a check for ¥1,000 drawn by the Fuji Aviation Meter Company and other valuable articles. They were easily identified as belonging to Mr. Eizo Watanabe of the Tokyo office of the Osaka Machine Tool Works. The finder was honest enough to bring the articles to the police station and receive in exchange an official receipt.

So far so good. However, before the owner of the article was duly notified by the police, the shrewd finder hastened to approach him in order to negotiate for a fair amount of reward. The owner promised him ¥20 which far from satisfied the finder and so he visited the Metropolitan Police under guise of another man and asked official counsel on a pretended circumstance that he was at a loss as to how to reward a wounded war veteran who had found ¥1,000 that he has dropped.

Somehow, the authorities did not give him a definite answer and he repeated his call to the police persisting in his demand that a definite suggestion be given him. Smelling something out-of-ordinary, the police finally used their persuasive methods and the whole truth came to light.

He was released when he promised that he would report back with the receipt to facilitate quick delivery of the articles to the rightful owner through the office. The police are still waiting, but the receipt has not yet been turned in and the loser is still minus his property, the paper says.

Makes Sweet Discovery

The third case is that of the finding of 200 pounds of sugar in Minato-machi, Kyobashi Ward, which, due to absence of claimant, was finally given to the finder.

The finding was made about 8 o'clock in the morning on February 24, last year, by Mr. Eiji Shimasawa, a strawbag dealer. There was about 200 pounds of the sugar contained in 10 sacks and he took it to the Metropolitan Police Board in a motor truck.

A little surprised with their unusual find, the authorities of the board started hunting for the owner. They were sure it would be claimed right soon in consideration of the nature of the article which even at that time was becoming scarce on the market. Official expectations were quite betrayed, however, for the article remained unclaimed for one full year despite the notice made of it through radio broadcasting.

The result was that Mr. Shimasawa was called to the Metropolitan Police Board, Monday, and given the proceeds obtained through the official auction of the sugar, which, according to the newspaper, amounted to about ¥43.

Confidence Evoked By Matsuoka Visit

that the Minister take the present opportunity of enunciating Japan's traditional national policy of universal brotherhood promotion as the shortcut to the achievement of the new order.

With introductory remarks speculating on the nature of the Foreign Minister's mission in his present visit to Europe, the Tairiku Shimpo expresses its hope that diplomatic efforts of a most positive nature for the facilitation of the new order will be made by the Axis Powers at this opportunity of the Minister's personal call.

"The China affair is now believed by many observers to have become part of the world war. The incident can no longer be settled within itself, but its solution must be sought on the scale of worldwide politics. This is, however, by no means the result of Japan's unnecessary advance into the world's difficulties, but solely the consequence of the elevation of the Japanese international position. It has come to occupy a position of decisive importance in world politics.

"In order to ensure satisfactory accomplishment of its duties due to such a position, Japan should employ more resolute, more conscious efforts for consolidation of its footing at home so as to meet any significant turn of the situation in the world and in the Pacific."

REVISION IN PRICES OF FARM GOODS DUE

New Step Decided by Commerce Ministry, but Rice Quotation To Be Maintained

Accompanying the transfer of all administrative functions relative to the official prices of agricultural products from the Commerce and Industry Ministry to the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry, the latter will undertake a wholesale revision of standard prices, making an exception of rice, in order to facilitate greater yields in agricultural industry in line with national policy.

The prevailing official prices were fixed last June by the Commerce and Industry Ministry, but they have come to be regarded as not in keeping with the current conditions in the agricultural industries as well as ineffective in enabling the Government to pursue its compaign for greater output. Appropriate prices adjusted to actual conditions must be fixed in order to encourage the farmers to strive for greater yields, it is now being urged by various circles.

Official prices of wheat, barley, and other cereals, potatoes, etc. will accordingly be revised. The current official price for rice, however, will be maintained, as it is the policy of the Government not to effect any change in midst of a rice year.

Charcoal Price Revision

The Agriculture and Forestry Ministry is also reported to be contemplating a revision of the official prices of charcoal, especially of those kinds used for industrial purposes. In 1939, it will be recalled, there were some 10,000 varieties of charcoal, but these were reduced to some 149 in 1940 when the official prices fixing system was initiated, and subsequently, production has shown encouraging results. The 1940 total production amounted to 248,000,000 kan or approximately 50,000,000 kan more than the scheduled production of 190,000,000 kan.

In the forthcoming revision of official prices of charcoal, it is generally anticipated that the price level will be raised considerably for charcoal used for industrial purposes.

DEFENSE LAWYER HELD

Authorities Accuse Attorney of Inciting False Trial Testimony

Mr. Tadao Takai, a lawyer practicing at Totsuka-machi, Yodobashi Ward, who was held for inquiry at the Tokyo Ward Attorney Bureau on a charge of perjury was prosecuted Friday, says Domei.

He took up the defense of Mr. Kazuji Totsuka, a cotton merchant in Asakusa, who is being held for black market sales of cotton. It is suspected that Mr. Takai persuaded the merchant to give false evidence in his own case. The authorities decided to enforce severe measures from the standpoint of stamping out the black market.

MULBERRY AREAS WANTED FOR FARMS

Sericulture Bureau Director Suggests Move to Step Up Foodstuffs Output

Sericulturists must be induced to spare 66,000 hectares of their mulberry farms for the production of agricultural foodstuffs during the next fiscal year, it was stated by the director of the Sericultural Bureau of the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry in his instructions to the officials in charge of sericultural affairs in different localities in Japan Proper and Chosen at the first-day session of their conference held Monday.

The instructions which followed a speech by the Agriculture and Forestry Minister included the following points:

1. Silkworm egg production allocations shall be given only to those co-operative associations of silkworm egg raisers or those individual raisers who have sufficiently large facilities and recognized as proper by the Agriculture and Forestry Minister.

2. For the purpose of increasing agricultural foodstuffs, the sericulturists must be induced to spare 66,000 hectares of their mulberry farms for the production of sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, paddy rice, dry farm rice, hemp, etc. during the next fiscal year. Undertakings for such shifting will be subsidized by the Government under the 1941-42 budget plan.

3. The local sericultural officials must give more positive guidance to the silk cocoon raisers' co-operative associations regarding their expansion in view of the fact that smooth operation of the present raw silk control law depends on them, especially in connection with the distribution control of silkworm eggs and silk cocoon production.

4. The Government is attempting to revise the existing methods of grading and examining silk cocoons in order to elevate efficiency. The local sericultural officials are requested to keep in close touch with various sections concerned.

5. The present raw silk industry control law calls for a thorough-going investigation of production costs of silkworm eggs and raw silk.

Control Association to Be Inaugurated At End of This Month

A Cement Control Association, which was planned as part of the new industrial structure program, will be inaugurated at the end of this month, it was decided at the fifth meeting of the organizing committee held last Saturday at the Tokiwaya Restaurant, Marunouchi, reports the Yomiuri.

After lengthy discussions, the conferees drafted the prospectus of the projected control agency, which will be presented for approval at the meeting of all cement industrialists to be held in a few days.

DIEPPE AGAIN SEES TROUBLED HISTORY

Town on Channel Coast Once Figured in European Naval Conflicts

The reported evacuation of some 30,000 civilians from the coastal area of Dieppe again hints at potential action along France's "invasion shores."

"Between German-occupied Dieppe and the British port of New Haven lie some 65 miles of rough Channel water," points out a bulletin from the National Geographic Society. "So rough is the passage that in normal times of easy shuttling back and forth between the two countries, most travelers preferred the shorter trip that landed them at Calais or Boulogne, to the northeast. For those who have made the Dieppe crossing, however, the port's name evokes memories of an unequaled view of the Normandy cliffs.

"Rising from the sea in sheer white walls, these cliffs seem unbroken. Only a narrow passageway, cut by the river Arques, leads to the wide, deep harbor of the port. Early Norman settlers, first attracted to this site because of its protected position and the safe depth of its natural basin, called their village Diep, meaning deep, which was later evolved into its present name.

Was Popular Resort

"With a population estimated at around 25,000 before the outbreak of the present war, Dieppe had become in recent decades one of France's most popular resorts. For all its gay vacation life, its luxurious villas, outdoor sports, its glittering beach playground dotted with bright-colored umbrellas and tents, the city's permanent citizens remained the same sturdy breed of sailors, fishermen, and artisans who had persisted there for centuries despite wars and pestilence.

"History records that from Dieppe men went out to found French settlements in Africa and to explore lands from Brazil to Iceland.

"In the fourteenth century, Dieppe freebooters captured British Southampton, while its sailors, on more lawful errands, were later part of French attempts to curb the Barbary pirates of the Mediterranean. During the sea wars between the expanding imperial powers of Spain, England and the Netherlands, the safe, deep harbor of Dieppe became a naval base for France competing fleet.

"It suffered heavily in the religious wars between Catholic and Huguenot and went through a disastrous plague in the years 1668 to 1670, which wiped out some 10,000 of its people. A quarter of a century later, a shattering bombardment by the English all but destroyed the ill-fortified city.

Occupied in 1870, Too

"Later rebuilt and struggling to attain its former position, the port was occupied for seven months by the Germans during the Franco-Prussian War of 1870.

"While Dieppe never regained its one-time position of naval supremacy, when it had a flourishing population of 60,000 people, it had in recent decades achieved a moderate prosperity as a commercial center and pleasure resort for the more conservative French and English visitors. The coming of the railway, too, and the improvement of port facilities during the World War had contributed to its growing importance in the nation's economy.

"In addition to the famous old handicrafts, which included lace-making, ivory carving and porcelain work, hard-working Dieppe had established a number of modern industries whereby incoming raw materials were turned, on-the-spot after French fashion, into finished and partly finished goods for sale beyond. In its plants, for example, coal from the colliery of Wales was transferred into fuel briquettes; timber from the open ships of Scandinavia became ships and window facing; raw cotton was turned into thread and textiles.

"For Dieppe citizens who may have to leave their homes and work because of war, fish, however, still provide the chief means of livelihood. From redolent Le Pollet, fishing suburb of the port, where its original Venetian atmosphere clings, Parisians have long received the major share of their seafood needs."

Jugoslavia Enters Tripartite Treaty

September.

In an interview with Domei, Mr. Inouye said as follows yesterday:

"A leading nation in the Balkans, Jugoslavia is rich in agriculture, livestock and mineral resources. It maintains a standing army 300,000 strong and its people have been known from ancient days for their bravery.

"Having grown to the present size from Serbia, it sided with the Allies in the first World War, annexing territories of Hungary and Turkey. Because the people are made up of many races, racial unification has constituted one of the most important problems of the country. From 60 to 70 per cent of the population of 16,000,000 is Slav, the rest comprising Croatians, Dalmatians, Montenegrins, Macedonians, and minorities of Germans, Italians, Hungarians and Turks.

Change in Policy

"The present Jugoslav Premier and Prince Paul, the Regent, are in able command of the people. About last summer they discarded a policy of depending on Britain and France in favor of one for the Axis. When I left that country in September last year, the new diplomatic policy was firmly established.

"The country's mineral and agricultural products are mostly exported to Germany. The natives are brave and frugal and well disposed toward the Japanese. I saw once a country wedding in a farm village and the quaint costumes and customs struck me because they had much in common with the Japanese.

"The Jugoslav Premier is about 50 years old. Prince Paul and the foreign minister are both around 40 years old. The country's entrance in the Axis camp means a powerful deterrent to Greece's moves."

Further Success For U-Boats Seen

are en route to the United States to undergo repairs and overhauling, the German News Agency reported today.

D.N.B. quoted a report in the Baltimore Sun mentioning the impending arrival of a British cruiser in Norfolk, Virginia, and stating that additional British warships are expected to arrive in the United States. It is said the warships needed attention after long service at sea, taking part in convoy escort and other duties.

Meanwhile another D.N.B. item, via London and Stockholm, says Britain has been exerting diplomatic pressure on the American authorities in an attempt to induce the latter to institute a press censorship in the United States for more effective secrecy on military information.

Freighter Being Repaired

Domei

CHESTER, Pennsylvania, March 23.—The British freighter Narraganset, which was torpedoed by a submarine, is being repaired in the Sun Shipbuilding Company yards here, it was reliably reported yesterday.

The vessel thus apparently becomes the first British ship to undergo repairs in an American shipyard since the passage of the lease-lend bill.

Big Battleships Needed

Domei

LONDON, March 22.—Britain probably would be forced to use its finest battle-cruisers of the King George V type of battleship to foil the activities of the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, Nazi raiders operating in the American side of the Atlantic, authoritative sources believed today.

The two 26,000-ton German battle-cruisers were believed responsible for several sinkings of British vessels last weekend.

Because of their speed and powerful guns, naval quarters doubt whether it would be advisable to launch a drive against the raiders using anything smaller than battleship or battle-cruiser.

The Scharnhorst and Gneisenau were the German battle-cruisers mentioned as the raiders in the Atlantic by Mr. Winston Churchill, Prime Minister, in his speech last week.

Authoritative quarters here believe them to be the first German surface craft operating on the American side of the Atlantic since the Graf Spee, 10,000-ton pocket battleship which was cornered by British vessels at Montevideo and scuttled on December 17, 1939.

With a speed of 29 knots and carrying nine 11-inch guns, the two German battle-cruisers could only be opposed by British battleships of the King George V type and such battle-cruisers as the Hood, Renown and Repulse, all of which are bigger, faster and carry heavier guns.

AUDIENCE PLEASED BY HEAVY PROGRAM

Capacity House Greets New Symphony's Concert in Hibiya Hall

By I. J. Fisher

The 224th subscription concert by the New Symphony Orchestra was given last night, and will be repeated tonight, in Hibiya Public Hall. Mr. Joseph Rosenstock wielded the baton and Professor Willy Frey was the violin soloist.

A capacity crowd was in attendance, which contradicts my recent statement about students and attendance made in reviewing the Chuo Symphony concert. And, by the way, that concert was by the Chuo group and not the New Symphony, as was stated in the body of the review.

Last night's program was not by any means selected with an eye on the gallery, and in spite of its stiffness it was received with thunderous applause. The opening number was Brahms' Symphony No. 3, followed by the Violin Concerto in D minor, opus 47, by Sibelius, and the appealing and popular Flying Dutchman Overture by Wagner made a pleasing finale.

The Brahms' number is a difficult one for the average concert-goer to appreciate and digest. The first movement had the lightness and sweetness minus unwanted sentiment but there could have been more of the passionate element. The Andante was exquisitely given and the contrasting mood of gloom and brightness splendidly wrought. Clara Schumann's words express this movement perfectly: "I feel as though I were watching the worshippers at a woodland shrine, the babbling brook, the joyous play of beetles and insects; there is a bustling and whispering, and I feel safely at home in the joys of nature." The interpretation and performance gave just this effect last night and one felt transported.

The chamber music effect of the third movement was excellent and the woodwinds combined excellently with the strings and couple of horns in producing a feeling of high-spirited elevation. The Finale did not fare quite so well. There was flexibility in the conductor's handing but the ensemble was rather too labored. It is a stupendous movement and needs most expert control.

Sibelius' early work is on the whole extremely dull as far as orchestral writing is concerned. What brilliance there is in evidence is given to the soloist and it must be said that Mr. Frey did a good job. The folklorey fragmentary melodic bits were beautifully expressed by the violinist in sweet and warm tone, often luscious quality in the lower register. However, the connecting bits of development resolve into mere technical displays, all of which were well-handled. Its rhythmic energy is as a tonic and the best feature of the composition. Here soloist and orchestra fused splendidly, were in perfect accord, and gave great satisfaction. The tarantelle-like ending of the first movement, and the playing of the exquisite lyrical side of the Andante were outstanding. Aside from the Andante, the first and last movements are too much of a bustle to make much appeal to the average listener. One must cultivate a taste for this composition as one does for olives or caviar.

The Flying Dutchman Overture sent all home in good mood. It was an exceedingly fine rendition, and the interpretation fully sensed the drama and tragedy of the operatic story. The storm effect, and no composer has ever portrayed a storm effect so vividly as this one, was controlled and striking, and the final redemption theme of the wandering skipper and the motif of the sailors' joy as they land safely in port were superbly played.

Welles Lauds Soviets

I.N.S.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—The Soviet declaration of neutrality to Turkey and the adhesion of Jugoslavia to the Tripartite Pact were the two main matters dealt with by Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles in his press conference today.

Referring to the Soviet's assurance to Turkey that the Soviet would not embarrass it in any way in the event of its being compelled to fight a defensive war, Mr. Welles said that it was a matter of great satisfaction to America when a great Power like the Soviet Union reaffirms its intention of maintaining what it described as a comprehensive neutrality in the event a neighboring country suffers attack.

In the matter of Jugoslavia, Mr. Welles intimated that the United States Government had done what it could to prevent Jugoslavia's joining the Axis. In response to a question as to whether the United States had taken any diplomatic action to restrain the Jugoslavian Government, Mr. Welles replied that the policy of the American Government had been to make known to all other governments its hope that the sovereignty and independence of all nations would be respected.

Mr. Welles finished by recalling President Roosevelt's message to Chancellor Adolf Hitler in 1939 in which he expressed his hope that the independence and integrity of Jugoslavia and other small nations would not be disturbed.

MIDDLE-MEN DECIDE TO TRY PRODUCTION

Fruit Distributors Will Follow National Aims by Taking Up Farming Life

Practically all the members of the now-extinct association of fruit commission merchants in Ebara Ward have agreed to jointly establish themselves as producers of agricultural products, instead of distributors as formerly, in order to conform more closely with the present national policy, according to the Asahi.

These men, for some time past, have been considering how to face the mounting criticism that existence of commission merchants stands in the way of smooth flow of provisions. This criticism was partly felt in the form of reduced commission rates, officially imposed, last August.

Ever since then, these members of the Ebara branch of the Tokyo Central Wholesale Market have been discussing the idea of starting on a new enterprise, preferably in the line of production rather than distribution in which they had so far been engaged. The matter was most seriously considered by Mr. Yukimichi Hachimoto and Mr. Jiro Ochiai, chairman and vice-chairman of the commission merchants' association, respectively.

The first move by these men was made at the end of January when their association was merged with a wholesale green grocer company with which they were on trading terms. This was strongly opposed both by some among them and their fellow commission merchants' associations scattered throughout the country. However, the opposition was not enough to discourage the merchants. They soon passed a resolution among themselves to cease affiliation with the national league of the commission merchants' association.

Lately, further decision was made among these merchants, now members of the wholesale green grocer company, that they, especially those in commission business on their own account, should combine to establish their own agricultural village. Up to Tuesday, practically all of the old members of the commission merchants, totalling about 30, have agreed to the proposal, and now preparations are going on for acquiring the needed land and farm houses.

As reported by the newspaper, their small village will be established somewhere in Kanagawa Prefecture. About 30 households to be thus established in the village will each have approximately 1.5 acres of land.

For five years to come, the management of the agricultural work will be handled jointly including the joint cooking of the villagers' meals, it is expected.

French Cargo Vessels Escorted by Warships Pass Gibraltar Strait

MILITARY TRAINING SPREAD IN SCHOOLS

More Rigid Enforcement Planned in Universities Beginning This April

Military training in schools, in its 17th year, will be enforced more rigidly and systematically on university students, the Yomiuri reports, adding that its realization will come in April at the Tokyo Imperial University.

The new move is said to have been jointly planned by educational authorities and the military. The training, which was originally intended to "train the students in basic military principles and thus foster patriotism in them," is now to be raised to such a height that the students, through this training, will be fully prepared to fight on the firing line without any more discipline.

This military training, according to the newspaper, was instituted in 1924. In nearly all universities, however, it was not handled smoothly at first, largely because of the liberalism then on the ascendancy among students, with the result that only a few students underwent it at their option. It was only after the outbreak of the present China affair that the training began to assume its significance, when the university authorities started to impose training on all students, setting aside two hours a week solely for it.

Equal With Studies

As now being arranged at the Tokyo Imperial University military training will be on the same curricular status as other subjects. All the university shall be a composite unit of student forces with the president at its head. Thus all the students will be given a full chance of nourishing their fighting spirit, most needed in warfare, as well as instruction on military discipline, the military sense of duty and other phases.

A spokesman of the War Ministry in this connection is quoted by the newspaper as follows:

"Military training at schools was formerly regarded as a means of cultivating morals in students, which we think inadequate under the press of the times. It is the common duty of us Japanese to rise up as one man at a time of emergency. What we wish to realize in the proposed innovation is to prepare all students so that they may be able to fight effectively once they are needed."

Instructor Is Heard

Colonel Suesaburo Kitahara, the chief military trainer of the Tokyo Imperial University, is reported to have said on the same question:

"I am now contemplating a full realization of what is wanted by the War Ministry regarding our military training. The authorities of this university are in accord with me on the problem. President Yuzuru Hiraga of the university is now considering the possession for the institute of a new training ground. All in all, things are going on smoothly at the institute for a new phase in military training in the university in April."

Education Vice-Minister Toyosaburo Kikuchi told the newspaper relative to the question that:

"We perfectly agree with the proposed enforcement of training. As educational authorities, we hope all the students will make practical application of the scholastic information they are supposed to have, each according to his department."

MEAT SAVING DAYS TO START IN APRIL

To Readjust Situation Wherein Restaurants Have Plenty, Households Little

Meatless days will be established from April as a means of alleviating the current meat shortage, it was decided by the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry, says the Asahi.

Households are experiencing great difficulty in purchasing meat due to the inconvenient distribution facilities. On the other hand, ample supplies of meat are to be had at restaurants and other eating and drinking places because of excessive cornering. In view of the situation and to allot a larger amount of meat to households, the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry has decided on establishing meatless days beginning next month. Instructions were dispatched to prefectural authorities yesterday.

The date and other matters relating to the meatless-day system are to be decided on by each prefectural governor according to the circumstances in the prefectures. The Agriculture and Forestry Ministry, however, has its own regulations as follows:

1. If possible, a meatless day is to be observed once every week.
2. Butcher shops and restaurants are to simultaneously observe the day.

'No Sale' Signs

Therefore, if the above regulations should be enforced in Tokyo, butcher shops and restaurants in the city will all have to put up signs that day they are not to sell any meat. The authorities expect to prevent large supplies of meat from going to restaurants and other eating and drinking places by these means besides allotting a greater distribution to households.

A meat wholesale dealer in Shiba Ward expressed his opinion regarding the coming meatless days as follows:

"A meatless day is not so bad when one considers that economy in provisions must be observed in order to attain the object of increased provisions production. The current meat shortage, however, cannot be solved through such lukewarm methods. Stringent measures must be taken by the authorities and the meat merchants must reflect on the current situation if the problem is to be truly and effectively solved. The illegal doings of some meat wholesale dealers are a very regrettable thing. If there is not enough meat, we must take suitable measures coping with the shortage. The entire nation must equally partake in its joys and sorrows."

Little Business Anyhow

A proprietor of a butcher shop in Shinjuku said: "As we are hardly doing any business nowadays, the meatless days, if enforced, will not affect us much. Households will not be able to receive a fair distribution of meat if there aren't increased supplies coming to us. If we are to close our stores on meatless days, the methods of utilizing the day will become another problem. As far as I am concerned, I cannot think of any suitable measures."

"Even if the meatless days should be enforced, we will try to keep open by serving dishes which do not contain any meat," said a proprietor of a sukiyaki restaurant in Asakusa.

Unanimous approval is being expressed by the Metropolitan Police Board regarding the meatless-day system. A meeting will be held within a few days to confer on concrete measures.

Dishonest butchers and wholesale merchants are being strictly supervised by investigation squads dispatched by the Metropolitan Police Board. On the other hand, the dealers are being urged by the police to reform and adjust distribution facilities. As a result, butcher unions have been formed in every ward. Preparations for amalgamating the unions into a federation are being undertaken at present. There is also a movement for establishing a joint sales company with the object of rationalizing the wholesale dealers and attaining the aim of joint purchase and sale.

The price of meat will become a problem even if the problem of distribution should be solved, in view of the large decrease of meat supplies. Besides taking all precautions, the authorities are requesting the co-operation of dealers and households in the enforcement of the meatless days in order to prevent cornering and "black-marketing."

World Leadership By America Urged

tion in the European war now has become but a matter of hours. After all, war, even if prolonged, is an abnormal condition. Hence normality of peace is bound to return some day, and the United States which questioned Britain on the latter's war aims is in duty bound to clarify to its people and to the world what sort of a world it intends to bring about by its entry into the war.

"America is the richest country on earth and at the same time the safest. Traditionally, the American people do not wish to be embroiled in any European turmoil. It may say that its intention is to prevent invasion and aggression by Nazi Germany through aiding Britain, but that is merely a temporizing excuse for entering the war, and unless the U.S. Administration makes it clear to its people the ultimate object in view, or more precisely what kind of international situation it wants to create, it would be difficult to enlist the unstinted support of the nation. This time the old slogans 'war to end war' and 'make the world safe for democracy' will sound suspiciously like the false cry of 'wolf, wolf' of the shepherd-boy and will not be adequate to make the blood of young people boil to face death. The slogan 'down with Hitlerism' of the late Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain also rings falsely, like a counterfeit coin.

"The United States refused to join the League of Nations. Its entry into the European war would be wholly meaningless if it meant restoring the world to the Versailles status, which, the U.S. statesmen should be fully aware, would serve only to increase international resentment, hatred and fear based on the inconsistencies and incongruities of the past 20 years which have brought about the present upheaval. In other words, the United States is now faced with the necessity of liquidating its inconsistent foreign policy and of establishing a positive and synthetic world policy.

"Now that America has decided to support Britain in all conceivable ways at the risk of being dragged into the war, it is not permitted to be indifferent to the post bellum European order. In other words, it must of necessity synthesize its muddled policies toward Europe, the Far East and South America, and adopt a consistent world policy taking into full account the tendencies of world politics and economy. Otherwise, the tragedy of the Versailles order will be repeated.

"In the current European war, the right of neutrality hitherto considered by the United States as the Golden Rule of International Law has been trampled under foot; the sovereignty of small nations has been infringed upon and their independence has become virtually non-existent. It also has been proved that collective security can be maintained only so long as the great Powers wish to maintain it. When they chose to discard it, collective security will become collective insecurity. This is certainly a very valuable lesson, though it is a sad lesson.

"One of the greatest causes of the failure of the League of Nations was the non-participation of the United States. Any form of international organization without the support of the United States will prove powerless, and it was only natural that the League of Nations should have ended in a fiasco. Until about 1919 the prosperity of the United States apart from the rest of the world might have been possible, but due to the changes that have taken place in the political and economic conditions of the world during the past 20 years, America now has become one of the most important and inseparable links in the chain of world economy. It is impossible now for America to stand outside the domain of world economy and politics. In fact, it has now become absolutely necessary for it to lead the world.

"In establishing its world policy, the United States is called upon first of all, to solve the question of its policies toward Britain, Germany, the Soviet Union and Japan, in addition to its policy toward Latin America. However, now that it has decided to go 'all-out' in aiding Britain and preventing German aggression, it now remains to be seen what policies it will adopt toward Japan and the Soviet Union.

"It appears that the United States was comforted by the hypothetic hostile relations between Germany and the U.S.S.R., and it seemed to have pictured to itself the proverb 'when Greek joined Greek, then was the tug of war' and basked in the wishful thought that one day Germany and the Soviet Union would fight like Kilkeny cats. But present indications are that this possibility is all but lost, for the two nations now are apparently in close accord. This enables the Kremlin to direct its attention to East Asia, and in the event of the United States picking a quarrel with Japan, it will give Moscow a chance to Sovietize China. The United States, which presumably is anxious to save Europe from the calamities of war as speedily as possible, would find it most disadvantageous to divide its power between the Pacific and the Atlantic, and certainly it should not commit this fallacy. Would it not be more advantageous for America to co-operate with Japan in economically developing the whole of Asia so as to be fully prepared to meet the great economic depression which is bound to come after the current European war?

"Should not the United States contemplate a regional international structure that will contribute to world happiness and prosperity similar to the Pan-Americanism which has been adopted for the North and South Americas?"

An address by Education Minister Kunihiko Hashida, in which the nation's artists were urged to contribute to the construction of the East Asia Mutual Prosperity Sphere, was a feature of the general meeting of members of the Imperial Art Academy in Ueno yesterday morning.

He said the nation's artists could help national policy considerably by promoting the national spirit through means at their command.

ERITREAN CAPITAL BRITISH OBJECTIVE

Asmara Described as 'Bit of Italy Transplanted in Africa'

Asmara, inland capital of Eritrea and important objective on the British eastward drive from the Sudan, is set at an altitude of nearly 8,000 feet in the cool uplands of Italy's Red Sea colony, says a bulletin from the National Geographic Society.

"It is about 40 air miles southwest of the torrid port of Massawa, through which poured many of the Italian troops and war materials for the Ethiopian conquest of 1935-36.

"At present Eritrea is cut off from all such sea-borne supplies from the motherland, since England holds both the Gibraltar and Suez Canal outlets of the Mediterranean," continues the bulletin.

"Asmara is a bit of Italy transplanted in Africa. It resembles a city of southern Italy rather than one of tropical Africa. Italian architecture in homes, shops, coffee houses, sidewalk cafes, and churches; Italian dress, furniture, and customs all have been imported from the mother country to this once remote section of northeast Africa. Only the dusky, white-garbed natives reminded the peacetime visitor that Asmara was a part of the 'Dark' continent.

"Out of its last-recorded population of some 98,000 people, more than 50,000 are Italians—representing the largest concentration of Italian civilians in the colony. The rest of the inhabitants are chiefly Ethiopians, plus a few Europeans who have not yet moved out as a result of the war.

"On the fertile plateau of the nearby countryside Italian colonists normally carry on farming activities as at home. They use the familiar Italian two-wheeled cart. Their children, with those in the city—like the youth of Italy itself—are members of the Balilla the Fascist youth movement.

"Asmara has grown spectacularly during the five-year period that followed the taking over of Ethiopia. At the beginning of the Italian campaign its population was little more than 20,000 people. With its healthful, invigorating climate, a welcome improvement over that in the steaming regions of the Red Sea littoral, it became one of the leading colonial centers of Italian East Africa.

"Asmara's modern buildings include the administrative headquarters for the colony (augmented since 1936 by several former Ethiopian districts), the Governor's palace, workers clubs and housing centers, a hospital, and a 'Casa del Fascio,' the House of the Fasces, the old Roman emblem of power.

"The city is well-fortified. It is the headquarters of the military mapping department for Italy's colonial troops in Eritrea. Crowning a hill which overlooks the town is Fort Baldissera, which has the reputation of being 'impregnable.'

"South of the capital is the new airport, from which, before the outbreak of the present war, regular service was in operation to Benghasi, Libya and Rome, as well as to Assab near the end of the Eritrean coast, and to Addis Ababa in the heart of Ethiopia.

"Rail and road facilities make Asmara an especially strategic point in the colony. From the Biscia railhead, already in the hands of the British, steel links the western Eritrean centers of Agordat (also reported occupied) and Cheren with the capital. From Asmara to Massawa and the coast is an additional rail distance of only about 75 miles.

"Motor roads, too, extend from the city in all directions—examples of Italy's strenuous colonial road-building program of recent years."

Domei

NEW YORK, March 25.—The New York Daily News, tabloid with the largest circulation in the world, today said that the United States Navy Department has ordered officers in the New York area to proceed to Honolulu within two weeks.

In a story bearing no dateline, the popular tabloid, speculating on the chartering of the steamship Washington by the United States army, said that there had been reports that it might be used as a transport to carry armed forces to Hawaii.

The Daily News also added that the Navy Department recently issued orders which were directed to officers on duty in the New York area to prepare to leave for Honolulu within two weeks.

HORIGUCHI WILL FACE YAMADA ON FIGHT CARD

Featherweight May Have Hands Full in Tussle With Young Boxer

The weekly boxing program in Hibiya Public Hall Monday night will feature a ten-round bout between Tsuneo Piston Horiguchi, top-notch featherweight, and youthful Shintaro Snake Yamada of the Fujii Boxing Club. Five six-rounders will round out the card starting at 5:30 o'clock.

Once the king-pin of Japan's fistic circles, the Piston has slipped considerably in the last year and has had trouble scoring victories. Many fans believe the Piston is definitely on the down-grade and will soon be forced to step aside for such crack fighters as Soldier Boy Sasazaki and Ryushin Boku.

In meeting Snake Yamada, Horiguchi should have some trouble, but the consensus is that Yamada is still too inexperienced and too easily hurt to score a win over Piston. Although the Fujii club fighter has a good record, he suffered a K.O. in a bout against Toshio Fukuda several weeks ago when his defense was far from good.

The six-rounders, all well-matched will be Sakiri vs. Inouye, Hoshino vs. Akiyama, Tajima vs. Suzuki, M. Hanada vs. Sakai, S. Hanada vs. Akechi.

Believe It or Not, by Ripley

SOVIET FRIENDSHIP HELD URGENT NEED

Kremlin Said to Have Demonstrated Preference for Closer Ties With Axis

In an article appearing in the Gaiko Jiho (Diplomatic Review) Mr. Sadao Nakayama, authority on Soviet affairs, emphasizes the need of promoting friendship between the Soviet Union and the Axis Powers, according to Domei.

"With intensification of the European war situation, the United States has embarked on its policy of full dress assistance to Great Britain by supplying arms and ammunition directly to the latter," says the writer. "It also has imposed military and economic pressure upon Japan under the pretext of protecting its interests and the British colonies in the Pacific. As a result, relations between the United States and Japan have been greatly aggravated. This situation, whether they like or not, is gravely threatening the relations between the two countries concerned.

"Needless to say, relations between Japan and the United States will be greatly affected by the development of the present European war. It is not too much to say that the expected German invasion of Britain will surely affect the relations between Japan and the United States. In the meantime, the German invasion, when it comes, in my opinion will determine whether the European war will come to an end in a short period or will be protracted for a long time. In this sense, much significance is attached to the result of the expected German landing operations against Britain. If Germany succeeds, Britain surely will collapse and the United States will give up its attempt to assist Britain. On the contrary, if Germany fails to get a foothold in England, the United States will become involved in the European war, which then will become a protracted affair.

Soviet Attitude Significant

"From this point of view, much significance is attached to the attitude to be taken by the Soviet Union, which has strengthened its self-defense through conclusion of the Soviet-German economic agreement and its advance toward the adjacent countries. This means that the Soviet Union is in a position to enjoy common interests with the Berlin-Rome Axis Powers with the collapse of the old order in Europe. Full co-operation between the Soviet Union and Germany is demonstrated, despite Anglo-American activities behind the scenes for checking such trends, in the recent conclusion of the Soviet-German economic agreement and conclusion of an agreement for the exchange of nationals. However, it would be premature to judge the Soviet attitude toward Pacific problems merely on the basis of its relations with Germany.

"The Soviet foreign policies should be divided into two factors—the Soviet national setup and the world policies of the Comintern. Judging from the latter, it can be said that the Soviet desires to see the present European war develop into a protracted world conflagration so as to exhaust the belligerent Powers financially and militarily. In this sense, the Soviet Union may wish to have the European war extended to the Pacific, thus involving Japan and the United States. Therefore, the outlook on the part of the Soviet Union in the European war may be that Germany has various difficulties to overcome before attempting to invade Britain because of its naval weakness and that the possibility that the European war may develop into a second world war, with the gradual aggravation of relations between Japan and the United States.

Relations Examined

"Turning to the angle of the relations between the Soviet Union and the United States, it can be said that there is little to affect their interests directly, though they may become future rivals because the former is the originator of Communism and the latter is the leader of the capitalistic countries. In other words, the economic field is the only scope in which they have any connection, broadly speaking.

"At the time of America's recognition of the Soviet Union, the United States was in the grip of an unprecedented financial crisis. Therefore, the United States had to change its financial policy. On the other hand, the Soviet Union at that time was in need of a large quantity of raw materials necessary for the execution of its second five-year plan. From this point of view, the Soviet Union and the United States at that time had common interests in their economic relations. However, the economic relations between the two countries were greatly affected by the rapprochement between the Soviet Union and Germany. The Soviet-German accord was based ostensibly on their economic relations, but actually and practically on their political co-operation. In short, the Soviet Union preferred friendship with Germany to that of the United States.

"In order to strengthen its assistance to Britain and check Japan's southward advance, the United States is forced to induce the Soviet Union to rely upon America. The United States needs to minimize the effect of the Soviet rapprochement with the Axis Powers. For this purpose, it has withdrawn its moral embargo on exports to the Soviet Union and has accelerated its assistance to the Chungking regime. It is not known yet how great an amount of raw materials has been exported to the Soviet Union. However, much significance is attached to their trade relations, judging from the fact that the United States has established a new consulate at Vladivostok. At the same time, much interest is attached to the attitude in which the Soviet Union will utilize the American offer. At any rate, it is certain that the Soviet Union is now in a favorable position.

Outlook Better

"Relations between the Soviet Union and Japan have come into the limelight through the speeches delivered by Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka during the last Diet session and the statements issued by the Cabinet Information Board thereon. It has been revealed that the Soviet Union which had failed to understand Japan's real intention about its southern expansion policy began to realize it. This will be demonstrated by the fact that the Soviet Union agreed to conclude the Soviet-Japanese fisheries modus vivendi and to the organization of a mixed committee for border demarcation. In parallel with the Soviet-Japanese negotiations for conclusion of a long term fisheries agreement, the Soviet-Japanese trade negotiations were resumed on February 27. It is true that the resumption of the Soviet-Japanese negotiations are not such a fresh matter as to evoke surprise but it should be regarded as the prerequisite for the desired complete understanding between the two countries. In this sense, it is not too much to predict that it has political significance.

"To tell the truth, Soviet-Japanese relations in recent years have not been too favorable.

"Relations between the two countries were most aggravated at the time of the conclusion of the Japanese-German anti-Comintern pact. In view of the fact that the Soviet Union and Japan are adjacent, the Soviet-Japanese relations have more significance than those between Japan and the United States in various fields such as political, military and economic.

Events Take Turn

"An important turn was made in international relations as the result of the outbreak of the European war, conclusion of the Soviet-German agreement and conclusion of the Tripartite Alliance among Japan, Germany and Italy. In the light of the spirit of the tripartite pact, Japan now stands in a position to check extension of the European war to the Far East and participation of the United States in the European conflict. At the same time Japan's southward policy should be interpreted as the invocation of its self-defence rights against the ever-increasing pressure imposed jointly by Britain and the United States upon Japan.

"It is natural that the Soviet Union has great concern about the further development in the Pacific situation, which recently has been aggravated. However, the role to be played by the Soviet Union in this connection has been stipulated in Article 5 of the Tripartite Pact. The Soviet-Japanese relations are now taking the direction of strengthening Article 5 of the pact. In the eyes of the Soviets, success or failure of the projected readjustment of the Soviet-Japanese relation depends much upon the China incident. In the meantime, Anglo-American domination of the Pacific depends much on the success or failure of Germany's invasion of Britain. Such being the present situation, it is not too much to say that America's assistance to Britain is characterized with the possible annexation by the United States of the collapsing British colonies.

"In this sense, it is absolutely necessary to keep the Soviet Union as much as possible in friendly relations with the Axis Powers."

Government Decides to Name Governors As Heads of Throne Aid in Prefectures

All prefectural branches of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association shall be headed by the prefectural governors, it has recently been decided by the Government, according to the Kokumin.

This decision, the newspaper says, will be formally announced at the gubernatorial conference scheduled for Tokyo April 7. The headquarters of the branches will shortly be notified to that effect.

The number of the village or town branches of the assistance association has already reached more than 12,000. With these branches added to those of the Co-operative Council of the Association and the many units organized as the propelling force for the rule assistance movement, preparations now seem fully made for the effective realization of the association's aims, excepting that prefectural branches are still under the transitional directorship of a standing committee.

Each prefectural branch should be placed under the directorship of one person, it has been advocated among those seriously concerned with the assistance movement. This view is gradually gaining weight as all village or town branches are now under the supervision of the headman of the village or town. On the other hand, there is another thing to be considered along with the same question, that the Imperial Rule Assistance Association should be inseparably united with Government. For these considerations, the Government has lately decided to appoint the prefectural governors as heads of the prefectural branches of the association.

There are, however, views strongly opposed to this, mostly among Diet members. The Government, therefore, is now closely conferring with the association leaders for bringing about the effective working of the whole system through the reorganization of both its system and the personnel. Thus will the opposed views hovering among Diet members be driven away, it is earnestly hoped by the Government.

Matsuoka, Fuehrer Have First Meeting, Eye Various Topics

gle with England will be conducted with unparalleled fanaticism," declared Reich Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop when toasting Japanese Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka at the dinner given in his honor.

"Each bomb brings England nearer to defeat," he continued. "With each ton sunk one piece of Great Britain sinks. Our armies stand ready. We know that the war is decided already, and we believe the whole world will also realize it at the end of 1941. The Tripartite Pact will oppose anyone attempting to extend or prolong the war, and will tolerate no interference, no matter whence it comes."

In his reply, Mr. Matsuoka said that "the Tripartite Pact is basically a peace pact which will prevent the extension of the war or any intervention in the new order in Europe or East Asia."

The official communique which announced the meeting between Chancellor Adolf Hitler and Mr. Masuoka said, "The conversation was conducted in the spirit of the warmest friendship between the two countries, and all acute political problems were touched on."

Rome Is Ready

Domei

ROME, March 27.—Mr. Yosuke Matsuoka, Japanese Foreign Minister, is scheduled to arrive here at 6 o'clock Monday evening accompanied by a special Italian mission which will go to Brenner Pass to welcome the Japanese national guest, it was announced today. At Ostia station in Rome, Mr. Matsuoka will be greeted by Count Galeazzo Ciano, Foreign Minister, and other Italian high officials.

Upon his arrival Mr. Matsuoka will review a guard of honor and then drive to Villa Madama, passing en route the famous Colosseum and the ruins of the Roman forum.

During the first of his three-day stay in Rome, Mr. Matsuoka is scheduled to visit the Palazzo del Quirinale, where he will sign the register for State guests, the Pantheon and the Fatherland Altar memorial dedicated to the Fascist dead.

Later he will be received by King Victor Emmanuel and afterwards he will call on Premier Benito Mussolini and Count Ciano. A special exhibition of sports and gymnastic drill will be held for the Japanese Foreign Minister.

Although four days remain before Mr. Matsuoka's arrival, officials and workmen are busily engaged decorating the capital with the Japanese and Italian flags.

JUSTICE MINISTER PLANS RESHUFFLE IN PERSONNEL

Yanagawa Tells Conference Wish for Secretarial Training Courses

Justice Minister Heisuke Yanagawa expressed a wish to make fresh reshuffles in his Ministry's personnel at a conference of chiefs of appallate courts and chief procurators at his official residence yesterday morning.

Present were Justice Vice-Minister Masataro Miyako and bureau and department chiefs, Chief Takeshi Nagashima of the Supreme Court and Procurator-General Michiyo Iwamura.

At the outset of the meeting, the Justice Minister wished for co-operation of all in conducting reshuffles in the Ministry's personnel which has remained comparatively unchanged because of the age-limit system.

Emphasizing the need of a high cultural standard for justice officials, he asked for increased consideration in recruiting new officials. He also hoped that the training courses for Ministry secretaries will be maintained on a proper basis to improve their abilities.

Discussion followed as to the methods of realizing the Justice Minister's wishes. The meeting ended at noon.

A series of reshuffles is expected in the Ministry personnel this year, affecting 20 officials of Chokunin ranks and many of Sonin ranks, according to Domei.

BEST MILE RUNNERS WIN DESPITE HURTS

Most of Sport World's Great Developed While Overcoming Past Injuries

I.N.S.

NEW YORK, March 2.—If precedent means anything, the surest road to fame as a great mile runner, is to break a leg early in life or get it severely burned in a fire.

That statement isn't made facetiously. It's matter of record that many of the greatest athletes the world has ever seen developed their athletic ability while striving to overcome a physical handicap.

John Paul Jones, Cornell's famous miler of 25 years ago; Johnny Weismuller, the swimmer, and a host of other Americans took up athletics to overcome weak constitutions. And they stuck to their task so long and so faithfully that they developed both skill and stamina.

It may surprise you to learn that virtually all of our great mile runners of today were handicapped early in life by severe injuries. Look over the roster of our great milers of recent years—Glenn Cunningham, Les MacMitchell, Walter Mehl, Bill Bonthron, Gene Venzke, Lou Zamperini, Archie San Romani—all victims of crippling accidents.

Fire Scarred Glenn

Cunningham's legs are a mass of scars from ankle to knee, the result of a school house fire that took the life of his brother.

MacMitchell developed paralysis following a siege of illness as a boy and had to learn to walk again.

Bonthron's legs show deep scars as the result of electrical burns incurred when he came in contact with a high tension wire.

San Romani's leg was so badly crushed by a truck that surgeons wanted to amputate but the boy's father refused to let them operate.

Venzke went rabbit hunting one time and accidentally discharged a load of buckshot into his hip. He still carries 50 slugs of lead in that same hip through every race.

Zamperini Marvel Man

Zamperini is the marvel of the lot. There was a time when a hospital thought seriously of reserving a bed for him. Once one of his toes was almost severed. Another time he ran in iron pipe into his hip bone. Then he splintered a knee when thrown by a broncho and spent four months in a hospital. Then a horse kicked him and broke his ankle. Next he ripped a leg ligament in an auto smashup. And on top of that he cracked his ankle again on skis.

All those boys had to start slowly and painstakingly, first to walk and then to run. But they didn't run a mile or two now and then. They ran and ran and ran some more every day until they gradually developed iron muscles and tremendous lungs. To say nothing about their hearts because it must be self-evident that these fellows have about all the courage possible for a human being to possess.

Japanese Aim Said Liberation of Asia

and guidance. Japan and China as well as other races must seriously consider together and solve jointly the Great Asia problem, in line with the new order that follows the great destruction of the world war. That is the natural force, and what is to be decided concretely is only of secondary importance. All depends on whether or not China will co-operate in the construction of the Great Asia new order. The war has now moved from China to southeastern Asia, about to enter the stage of the war of all Asia."

YANAGAWA IS NAMED TO THRONE AID POST

Konoye Formally Appoints Justice Minister Vice-President, Ishiwata as Secretary

Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye, as president of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association, yesterday appointed Justice Minister Lieutenant-General Heisuke Yanagawa and Mr. Sotaro Ishiwata, former Finance Minister, respectively vice-president and secretary-general of the organization, reports Domei.

The appointment followed an interview between Lieutenant-General Yanagawa and Mr. Ishiwata, and Mr. Kenji Tomita, Chief Cabinet Secretary, and Mr. Naokai Murase, chief of the Legislative Bureau, at the Premier's official residence yesterday morning at 9:50 o'clock.

Their views on appointing new personnel of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association being found identical, Mr. Tomita telephoned Premier Konoye who appointed the Lieutenant-General and Mr. Ishiwata in the new posts, according to the news agency.

The details of the reorganization and the new personnel of the staff of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association will be decided at a Cabinet meeting April 1, Domei predicts.

Director Hurries Back

Mr. Ryunosuke Goto, director of the organization bureau of the association, who had been traveling in Kyushu, returned hurriedly to Tokyo Friday at the news of the resignation en masse of leaders of the association, the Hochi says.

One of the aides of Premier Konoye, Mr. Goto has been active in organizing the younger generation into the association. After seeing former Secretary-General Count Yoriyasu Arima at the association headquarters Friday, Mr. Goto said:

"I learned about the mass resignation Wednesday night at Kumamoto, and telephoned my resignation at Hiroshima, on my way to Tokyo.

"I am indeed surprised at the sudden change. Only a few days ago, I was present at a rally of 1,500 youths at Fukuoka to pledge devotion to the Imperial Rule Assistance Association. Their enthusiastic support of the cause was so touching that I couldn't control my tears. The rally at Kumamoto was held in the rain, attended by another 1,500 youths.

Youth Will Rise

"Youths in the countryside are going to rise for the noble cause with unbounded enthusiasm. They must not be disappointed by the reorganization of the association. However the structure of the association may be changed, the spirit of its foundation should not be lost."

The bureau directors of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association, who have sent in their resignations to Count Yoriyasu Arima, met yesterday afternoon to discuss their future course, Domei reports.

Following the meeting, which ended at 5 o'clock, the following statement was issued:

"We saw that our resignations are being placed in the hands of Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye, president of the association. Our resignation en masse was by way of assuming the responsibility for the unsatisfactory state of affairs which has prevailed in the association since its establishment. It also was designed to facilitate the Government's task of effecting revisions in the organization of the association. We have a great desire for the development of the throne a'd movement in the right direction through the united efforts of officials and civilians."

The report telling of the appointment of Mr. Shinrokuro Hidaka as Minister Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary is cancelled, Domei reports.

New Policy Stated

Following his formal appointment as vice-president, General Yanagawa stated his policy of the reform to the following effect:

"Since the prime object of the forthcoming reorganization of the group is to reorganize it on a true national basis, the question of personnel, I believe, must be dealt most carefully and fairly. Although the question of personnel must be dealt with most seriously, some personal considerations must also be given to certain extent.

"As any rate, since the association is not a government office, I am planning to settle difficulties concerning personnel by frankly exchanging views with those people concerned. Mr. Ishiwata and I will solve the personnel question mostly," he added.

As to the reorganization of the system, the newly appointed vice-president stated that some bureaus of the existing five will be abolished. He said in this connection that the existing Diet Bureau will be discontinued and, instead, members of the Diet will be appointed to various posts of the association.

He added that no change will be effected as the result of the forthcoming reform to the system of local chapters. As to the Central Co-operative Council, he stated that no decision has thus far been made whether to continue or abolish it. He, however, added the meeting of the Council originally scheduled to take place toward the end of April will most likely not be held as the reformed association will not be ready.

Will Retain Ministry

"Although views have been expressed by some circles concerning the change of the name of the association, I have nothing to say at present. As to my status, I think I will hold the portfolio of Justice Minister concurrently, at least for a time being."

Meanwhile, it is reported that the army has decided to render full support to the forthcoming reform of the group under the newly appointed vice-president, General Yanagawa, with the assistance of Mr. Ishiwata as the secretary-general. The army, it is understood, has been holding that the fundamental principle should not be changed as a result of the forthcoming reorganization, and, instead, it has held the opinion that the movement should be further strengthened, maintaining an indivisible relation with the Government.

TRACK FANS NOTED AS MOST INFORMED

President of Madison Square Garden Believes Them Sport World's Experts

I.N.S.

NEW YORK, March 5.—Who is the most expert fan?

According to Colonel John Reed Kilpatrick, president of Madison Square Garden, sports center of the world, the most expert of all is the track and field fan.

"I have been watching crowds of all kinds for years here in the Garden," says the former All-American end at Yale, "and I am forced to conclude that no fan knows as much about his favorite sport as the track fan.

Records in Their Heads

"You can walk around the arena at any big track meet and find hundreds of men with stop watches in their hands. Track fans don't have to consult the record books—they carry the records in their heads.

"During the running of one of the big mile features we always announce the times by quarters. When the time for the first quarter is announced, the crowd either cheers or groans, depending on the time.

"Recently when Les MacMitchell equalled the world's competitive indoor mark for the mile a cheer went up instantly when the first quarter was announced as 58.4. They would have cheered for any time up to 61 or even 62 because they new that a record was possible. But if that time had been, say, 65 seconds, they would have hooted.

Good Form Recognized

"They know all about every event on the program. They can tell as well as any track coach what is wrong with a pole vaulter's form or why a runner isn't going good.

"And the reason they know is because virtually all of them have been track and field athletes themselves! Unlike many other athletes, a track man never loses interest in his own sport till the day he dies.

"You can attend any big fight and hear lots of the fight fans discussing baseball or attend a ball game and hear the fans talking fights. But you will never hear a track fan discussing anything but track events.

Women Educated

"And the women track fans know just about as much as the men, because the track athlete has educated his wife, daughter or sweetheart in all the fine points of the game.

"By the way, it is interesting to note the different kinds of crowds that attend various sports. The fight crowd, for instance, is composed largely of the Broadwayites and the family man out for the night.

"The hockey crowd is still different. It is more of a family affair and most of the followers of the ice game never take in fights.

"Tennis produces a swanky Park Avenue crowd. You will see many of these same tennis fans joining up with the horsey set at polo matches.

Everybody Likes Baseball

"Baseball, of course, is everybody's game but football is composed almost entirely of ex-collegians and the average football fan probably knows less about the fine points of the game than any other fan.

"The six day bike grind drew almost entirely from the foreign elements and the Broadway night crowd.

"The most cosmopolitan of all crowds is the one always attracted by Sonja Henie. We have found that she draws them from all walks of life. Don't ask me why, because I don't know. All I do know is that you will find Park Avenue and Tenth avenue rubbing elbows any time she appears.

"Myself? Oh, I never was a track man. Football was my dish. But I never miss a track meet although I do occasionally miss a football game or a big fight. There is something about track that gets under your skin and stays there. Once you're a track fan, you're a track fan for life."

SHIMONOSEKI-MOJI TUNNEL TO BE COMPLETED SHORTLY

Railway Minister to Visit Project Today and Address Workers, Engineers

Railway Minister Gotaro Ogawa left Tokyo station at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon with Chief Genji Kurata of the Construction Bureau for Shimonoseki to inspect the submarine tunnel under the Shimonoseki-Moji Straits, which is expected to be opened shortly, reports Domei.

Excavation of the tunnel, started in 1936, has reached the stage where only a central wall of rock 10 yards thick remains to be penetrated. It is now expected that the tunnel will be opened for railway traffic at the latest by the end of next year.

Minister Ogawa and suite will descend into the tunnel today to speak words of appreciation to the workers and engineers. The party subsequently will inspect the Yawata Iron Works and Hakata harbor and on Monday will inspect coal transportation facilities at Wakamatsu port.

On April 1, he will give an address to railway workers of the Shimonoseki railway repairs office and the following day will leave Mitajiri by the Fuji special express for Tokyo.

DIGGERS GRUB HARD FOR ANCIENT GOLD

¥1,300,000 in Old Coins Believed Stashed Away in Chiba Prefecture

Two Tokyo inhabitants, Mr. Shinichiro Mori, a 53-year-old drapery dealer of Honjo, and Mrs. Yori Oki, 48-year-old wife of a Communications Ministry employe of Adachi, have been competing with each other in a mountainous village of Chiba Prefecture for the past nine years, their aim being to discover a pile of ancient gold coins believed to have been buried about 200 years ago, the Yomiuri reveals.

The site of this fabulous enterprise is the northeastern corner of Ichihara county, Chiba Prefecture. There, in a village called Shito, about five miles to the southwest of Shiki station on the Boso line of the Government railways, two gold digging works are heatedly going on at the front and the back of an unostentatious thatch-roofed cottage owned by the oldest family of the village, now headed by Mr. Koichi Narishima, a 43-year-old peasant.

Mr. Narishima is reportedly a descendant of Minamoto-no-Yoshimitsu, noted 12th century hero of the Minamoto clan. In March, 1751, Ichirobei Narishima, the sixth generation descendant of the founder of the Narishima family, buried 2,800 pieces of obang and cobang, the old coins of Japan in the ground somewhere on the premises of his house believedly located on the same site where the Narishima house is now situated. It is so understood from an old scrap of paper long treasured in the household of the Narishimas, which is making the cause of the hard rivalry going around the old house between the two Tokyo gold hunters.

Secret Revealed on Death Bed

When the father of the present head of the Narishimas was on his death bed in 1933 he, Atsushi Narishima, called to him his wife, Fude Narishima, now 65 years old, and his eldest son, Koichi, anad disclosed the existence of the old scrap of paper so far concealed from all family members. The scrap was the sole guide to the buried gold coins. The message on the old piece of paper is dubiously worded, apparently to fool the casual readers excepting these words in Chinese ideographs: "2,800 gold coins buried in March in the second year of Horeki (1752 A.D.)."

Soon the Narishima residence was the pilgrimage center of many gold hunters coming from near and afar. They came to know of the existence of the precious document. Some of them offered tens of thousands of yen for the fragment and the legal use of it. All of these gold maniacs, some way or other, could have a peep into the paper, the cant-like phrase of which, apparently the indication of the exact place of the treasure, was what the gold hunters found most obscure.

Anyhow, many enterprisers started digging the ground on the premises of the old house or around it. Some gave up the digging right soon, some in a few month and others in less than a year. The result is the competition going between Mr. Mori and Mrs. Oki, which has been kept up nine years since the existence of the old document became known. So far both enterprisers spent fifty to sixty thousand yen for their digging work, which will be continued on and on.

Mr. Mori's digging is proceeding in the front yard of the Narishima house, with a high wooden fence encircling the excavation, while Mrs. Oki's project is proceeding at the rear of the house. Each side employs five or six workers by the day, whose pay is being gradually raised, based on the competitive spirit of the enterprisers. The work is going on at such speed on each side that Mr. Narishima's request for not boring horizontal holes in the ground under his house is often ignored. The old house leans to one side as the result.

Trusts Military Science

Mr. Mori, when met by a representative of the Yomiuri, said: "I am a student of military science. It is owing to my information in this line that I believe I have understood the cant words in the document. I have so far made 425 trial diggings, spending about ¥36,000. I think I can strike the gold in two or three months. Now that I have been engaged in the hunting many years away from my wife and children in Tokyo, it is out of the question for me to leave without gains, since that rival woman may reach the treasure in my absence."

Mrs. Oki's words, according to the paper read: "Though I don't know what secret Mr. Mori has, I firmly believe I can reach the buried gold on the strength of my religious faith. Anyway, it will be soon that the treasure will be struck."

If the reportedly buried gold is found to be intact, it will be worth about ¥1,300,000 at the present market price according to spokesman of the Muramatsu precious metal store on the Ginza, who told the paper as follows:

"We never believed such old gold coins are buried anywhere in the neighboring prefecture. Because we are not informed of the nature of gold contained in such old coins, we cannot tell their exact worth. However, if the reported coins are of the same nature as those in use in the Tensho era (about 4570 A.D.), which we handled some time ago, their value will be about ¥1,300,000."

TOKYO, MONDAY, MARCH 31, 1941

Dispossessed

The lease-lend law of America has worked a hardship on British people in a surprising way. Many British people have been required to leave their homes as the United States began building its bases. At Hamilton, Bermuda, a typical situation exists, and is described by Mr. Alan V. Waters, United Press correspondent, as poignant. Forced to give up the land on which their ancestors had lived for three centuries Bermudians were watching United States engineers lay the foundations of naval and aerial defenses.

St. David's Island was hardest hit. Mr. Waters cables:

"Tears ran down the islanders' faces when Lieut.-General Sir Denis Bernard, Governor of Bermuda, advised them that they would have to give up the greater part of their island."

These were the same people who, a few years ago, bitterly opposed the building of a bridge from St. George's to St. David's because "those damned Bermudians will be coming over here all the time."

When they were told to move this time they passed a resolution setting forth their remorse and patriotic acquiescence. These people had remained almost a race apart since the 1600's. Their island is a beautiful spot, renowed for its lily fields and rare Bermuda arrowroot. Even some Americans are being evicted from St. David's, including Dr. William Beebe, the aquatic scientist. Mr. William Marcus Greve, formerly an American, now a subject of Lichtenstein, must evacuate his vast estate on Bird Island where he had spent a fortune on improvements. The island is to be an airplane base. British barracks will be taken over, and near by American warships will anchor in the waters of Castle harbor and St. George's harbor.

This moving of populations is one of the most pitiful features of the war, with the world set awandering and wailing for lost homes and lost families. If sacrifice is a measure of reward the world is due for some immense benefits when the war is over.

Berlin and Rome Ease Trade

ROME.—Italy and Germany have signed a trade agreement suspending the system of commercial exchange for the duration of the war so far as military supplies are concerned.

The agreement, arrived at in weeks of negotiations, provided that during hostilities "all commerce of a military character between the two countries shall be conducted without consideration for trade balances or the condition of compensated accounts."

This provision is part of a general accord valid for 1941 which considerably increased the volume of Italian-German trade, and Fascists interpreted this as evidence that the war had not diminished the productive capacity of the Axis.

Arrangements were made, it was said, for Italy and Germany to furnish one another "a large part of the raw materials needed for the war economy and other products essential for the prosecution of the war."—Christian Science Monitor.

AMERICA'S FORGOTTEN OLD SONGS FORM INDEX OF NATIONAL HISTORY

Inspired by Foster Compositions, Century-Old Music Again Popular and Charms Song-Loving People

By L. H. ROBBINS

N.Y. Times

Although the music composers, authors and publishers have lately been at odds with most of the broadcasting companies, there still has been music in and on, the air. In such a time of musical drought, the public warbler who cannot sing the new songs without making due requital to the copyright holders sings the old songs instead. Orchestras dig up ivy-grown themes from the General Grant era and swing them; even such mossy antiques as "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean" are drafted, and the bald-headed row of the radio audience is said to be pleased, though the younger generation complains.

Forgotten Song Revived

But public interest in out-of-copyright music set in before the ASCAP controversy arose. The period motion pictures of recent years and the radio itself have restored many a forgotten song to popularity. Then, too, people in growing numbers are collecting the songs of the past as a hobby, inspired in part by Josiah K. Lilly's success in bringing together the Stephen Foster compositions.

The movement has so serious a following that the New York Public Library maintains a section devoted to century-old American music, and Elliott Shapiro of this city, collaborating with Harry Dichter of Philadelphia, has written a book, "Early American Sheet Music, Its Lure and Its Lore," to aid researchers. Americans from the start, Mr. Shapiro finds, have been about the most songful people on earth. Music has always had charms to soothe us, or to rouse us, as the need might be. Music has lifted us over many a bump in the road. What's more, the music we have sung through the years constitutes a fairly complete index of the history of the nation.

Eight songs—"Yankee Doodle," "Hail, Columbia," "The Star-Spangled Banner," "John Brown's Body," "Dixie," "Hot Time," "Over There" and "God Bless America"—mirror the highest moments of the country's story. "My Old Kentucky Home" enshrines a period. "Oh! Susanna" preserves the spirit of our westward pioneering; and a thousand and one other songs that sprang from the hearts of a new people and the soil of a new land fill in the gaps of the tale.

Old 'Yankee Doodle'

Besides revealing national history, the old songs often have histories of their own that endear them the more. The British wrote the rollicking "Yankee Doodle" to plague us, and sang it here in 1767, if not before that. But we captured it and turned it against Cornwallis and his Redcoats, with results known to the world. Collectors set high store by old "Yankee Doodles," especially versions containing lines not printable in these refined days. The earliest edition in separate song form, published in London about 1780, bore the legend: "Yankee Doodle, or (as now Christened by the Saints of New England) the Lexington March.—N. B. The Words to be Sung thro' the Nose."

At "Yankee Doodle's" side in the Revolution marched John Dickinson's "Liberty Song," set to the English tune "Hearts of Oak." This song was the first separately printed sheet of music issued in the Colonies. "Come, join hand in hand, brave Americans all," sang the Patriots; to which the scornful Tories retorted, "Come, shake your dull noddles, ye bumkins, and bawl."

"Adams and Liberty," the Boston patriotic song, echoed the young country's international troubles around 1798, and "went like wildfire." Thomas Paine, A. M., who wrote the words, changed his name afterward; one story is that he did not want his countrymen to mistake him for the impious Tom Paine who wrote "The Age of Reason," but there is some doubt about that, for Thomas, A. M., had a darkish reputation himself in his home town of Boston. Didn't he marry an actress.

"Hail, Columbia, Happy Land," a contemporary of Paine's song, lives on in the national songbook. Joseph Hopkinson, whose father, Francis, was a signer of the Declaration, wrote the words to the air of "The President's March," composed by Philip Pheil (or Phile) about 1793. That march, written for George Washington, was the beginning of a line of martial music for Presidents that has continued unbroken down to "The Franklin D. Roosevelt March," composed by the late William H. Woodin.

Writing Is Familiar

The story of the writing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" is familiar. Less known is the fact that the author, Francis Scott Key, called the song at first "The Defense of Fort McHenry." Moreover, he had written an earlier song, "The Warrior's Return," commemorating Stephen Decatur's home-coming from trimming the Tripoli pirates, and set it to the same borrowed tune, "Anacreon in Heaven." That theme tune of the convivial Anacreontic Society of London did lusty service on these shores. Paine took it for his "Adams and Liberty," and other song writers found it useful both before and after. Key started it on its way to become the music of the National Anthem.

First-edition copies of "The Star-Spangled Banner" are the prize items of song collectors. Only six copies are known to exist. Mr. Shapiro has one of them in his safe in Radio City. A "first" is identified by a misprint that makes the subtile read "A Pariotic Song."

The music sheets of other years were news sheets; they were out in the street almost before the news itself got around. We were always bursting into song over events. Victories inspired us; Hull's victory, and Perry's, and Jackson's at New Orleans; and battles, whether our own or other people's. The Battle of Trafalgar gave us a piece of music. So did the battle of Prague, which all well-brought-up American ladies celebrated on the piano for half a century after 1810. The songs of the Mexican W r were soon forgotten; it wasn't a war to be proud of; but a score of songs engraved the Civil War on human memory for all time.

Song Writers

American song writers were stirred no less by the events of peace. They recorded Lafayette's visit, and Jenny Lind's; the California gold rush, the arrival of the Great Eastern, the opening of the Erie Canal, the completion of the Croton Aqueduct, and the quadrennial political furores.

They told of slavery and Abolition. They immortalized the Iron Horse, the discovery of petroleum, the electric light and the telephone. They glorified the volunteer fireman, as in "The No. 1 Hook and Ladder Quickstep." They proclaimed the circus, with its daring young man on the flying trapese; the rise of baseball; the temperance and the anti-tobacco crusades; yes, even the swiftness of the express companies.

"The Sidewalks of New York," our municipal air, was not the first musical recognition of the delightfulness of life in this seaport. There was "New York O What a Charming City" (1831), to mention one of many enthusiastic numbers wherein bygone songbirds of the town worked off their local pride.

From the songs of America's century and a half a stranger with no other clues at hand could reasonably hope to reconstruct our folk ways and our emotional and spiritual life. "Woodman! Spare That Tree!" "Carry Me Back to Ole Virginny," "Do They Miss Me at Home?" "Climbing Up the Golden Stairs," "Grandfather's Clock," "Jingle Bells," "Listen to the Mockingbird," "The Little Brown Church in the Vale" and "The Little Brown Jug" tell a lot about America's interests in the days that are no more.

"Wait Till the Clouds Roll By" and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" bring up pictures of patient, valiant, grateful generations before us. And, "Seeing Nellie Home," "Jeanie With the Light Brown Hair," "Sweet Evelina" and "Sweet Genevieve," not to forget "Sweet Alice, Ben Bolt" and "Sweet Adeline," disclose pretty clearly a prime preoccupation of Homo americanus along the way.

Father of U.S. Ballad

Though native secular songs were numerous in the early years, beginning with Francis Hopkinson's "My Days Have Been So Wondrous Free" (1759), the first all-American song hit waited till 1821 to appear: "The Minstrel's Return From the War," words and music by John Hill Hewitt of New York, whom Tin Pan Alley honors as the father of the American ballad. ASCAP writers can sympathize with Hewitt, for he, too, had troubles with the song-greedy public. Failing to copyright his song, he lost $10,000.

Words for songs in early America were as plentiful as forest trees, but up to 1800 or thereabouts we depended on imported airs or alien composers. Pheil (or Phile), who gave us the "Hail Columbia" tune, was a German; and for our own John Howard Payne's "Home, Sweet Home," which Mr. Shapiro calls "the grandest song in the English language," an Englishman, Henry R. Bishop, wrote the music.

Famous names lard the story of early American music. The luckless Major John Andre wrote tender songs that are still preserved. Paul Revere engraved at least one music plate. The cover drawing of a skating polka, showing gay doings on Jamaica Pond, Boston, is attributed to Winslow Homer. "Cadet Whistler" designed the cover of "The Song of the U.S. Military Academy," published in 1852, before he gave up soldier life and became renowned as James McNeil Whistler, artist. And "N. Currier" appears on many song covers of the period preceding that of Currier & Ives prints.

Names on Writers' Roster

The shining literary names on the song writers' roster are enough alone to make Tin Pan Alley proud of its calling. Hawthorne and Emerson, Irving and Holmes, Longfellow and Lowell, Whittier, Cooper, Poe and Bryant, Lucy Larcom and Alice Carey wrote their share of the songs that America has loved. In the days when such talent was employed, songs did not often try to force "ideal" to rhyme with "kneel."

Though Mein & Fleeming of Boston published "The Liberty Song" of 1768, we looked to foreign publishers for our sheet music till 1787, when Thomas Dobson set up shop in Philadelphia. John Jacob Astor ran the first music store in New York; in time he discovered quicker ways of getting rich, and left music-selling to other people; at first to wigmakers, paperhangers, hatters, hairdressers, bathhouse-keepers and such, who carried music as a sideline.

The old music stores called themselves repositories, emporiums, magazines or, more commonly, "music saloons." They were forever moving. Thomas Birch of New York moved 34 times in the 74 years his firm was in business, and John Paff moved 13 times in 20 years. Music publishing too, seems to have had its precarious aspects. Of the 300 firms before 1880, only 15 remain today.

Old Music Collectors

The collecting of old music is not a mere scramble for "firsts." One fancier specializes in editions of "The Star-Spangled Banner," or of "Home, Sweet Home," or of "Dixie." Another occupies his spare time with Presidential marches. Some collectors have a taste for Negro plantation songs; others for minstrel songs, or for Harrigan & Hart songs, like "Maggie Murphy's Home," or for cover illustrations. There is search for songs centering around a personality or an event; thus Lincoln music is in demand. And not a few people assemble the music of the old days solely for its musical values.

So, thanks to the collectors, the movies, the radio and the disputes of the music world, the old songs are having their second chance. They entertain again, and to some who listen to them in this day of national stress they seem to have a still higher function. They speak as voices out of the past, telling often of other times of trial and reminding of the faith, the courage and the loving toil that went into the making of the American heritage. They help us to remember what America means.

75-Year-Old Oil Lamp

Seventy-five years ago, on January 2, 1866, a German tinsmith by the name of Albert Graetz, and one Emil Erich, opened a workshop for the manufacture of petroleum lamps. It was not long before this workshop grew into a huge factory employing thousands of workmen, which even now continues year by year to supply the world with oil lamps of all kinds. Notwithstanding the important part now played by electricity for lighting and heating purposes, there are many regions throughout the world where there is no electric current available, and where people still have to depend on the petroleum lamp for their light.

During the last 75 years, naturally, the construction of oil lamps has been improved in many particulars. The "Petromax" lamp, for instance, which is sold by the thousands in every country, gives a very bright light, on account of the fact that the liquid oil is first vaporized before being ignited. The oil is forced into the condenser by means of compressed air, where it is heated to the point when it turns into a combustible gas. This lamp develops 200 to 1,000 Hefner candle power, according to the size of the burner. The firm belongs exclusively to the Graetz family, and has been incorporated as a private stock company. In addition to oil lamps, its factories now produce lamp wicks, carburetters, electrical appliances for household use, and radio outfits. Two grandsons of Albert Graetz, Erich and Fritz, are now managing directors.

Bacteria Helpful to Peanuts

Not all bacteria are harmful. Some produce beneficial effects. One has been used to produce bigger and better peanuts in experiments conducted by Oscar N. Allen and Ethel K. Allen at the University of Hawaii. They report in "The Botanical Gazette," published by the University of Chicago, that goobers 50 per cent larger in size and with corresponding improvement in quality have been grown on plants whose roots were inoculated with any of seventeen varieties of rhizobia, a nitrogen-fixing bacterium. These micro-organisms have the ability to extract free nitrogen from the air and combine it in compounds which become plant food. Two of the most effective bacteria were obtained from a common weed, tisk trefoil.—N.Y. Herald Tribune.

White Magic

It snowed last night—and now at dawn
I stride, a pioneer,
Through country where no foot has trod,
And all is fresh and clear.

Upon the sheet of unmarred white
A virgin trail I etch,
And back behind me in a line
I see my footprints stretch.

Somewhat like this must God have felt
When His new world was born
And He looked on its purity
Upon the first bright morn.

Although my shining Universe
Is just a city square,
The magic of the falling snow
Has made a glory there!

Ready for Business

Attracted by a bright youngster, a dear old lady said to him: "I'd give a thousand pounds to have a little boy like you for my own."

"That's a lot of money, isn't is?" said the lad.

"Yes, but I have lots of money and no little boy."

"Mother wouldn't let you have me for good," said the boy. Then he thought for a minute and added brightly: "But you can hold my hand for sixpence."—Tit-Bits.

Sister's Viewpoint

Coed—"What position does your brother play on the team?"

Sister—"A sort of crouched, bent position."—The Recorder.

TRANQUILLITY

By BILLY B. COOPER

He is a solemn man, gentle, wise
In ways familiar to the ones who love
The warmth of sunlight and the fall of snow
On level fields. The glow within his eyes
Reveals perception. His strong hands are bronzed,
Calloused from use of leather, but his touch
Is tender when he holds a newborn lamb,
Or strokes the glossy hide of yearling colt.
His voice is mellow, he has little need
Of words. His quiet presence is enough
To draw men to him, and his latent strength
Prevails when spoken words are lost on air.
His is the silence of the silent earth,
The deep tranquillity of one whose days
Are tempered and attuned to nature's ways.

Wood Gas Producers Show Improvement in Agriculture

The urgency of further motorization of agriculture is being constantly stressed in Germany. It was announced, for instance, at a recent meeting of the Specialist Group for Agricultural Machines that the soil investigations carried out by the Reich Board for Scientific Farming had shown that about 60 per cent of the soil in important farming districts was suffering from soil disorders which had arisen for the most part as a result of inadequate deep preparation of the soil. The tractor, and the machines and implements used with it, have, of course, now opened up entirely new possibilities in this connection, but with the greatly increased demands, especially in Southeastern Europe, it is not possible to supply sufficient motor-fuel (gasoline) everywhere for all of these tractors and other machines.

It is, therefore, of great importance to further develop the various gas-producers for fuel, and to make them more efficient and reliable. Experiments which have been carried out by the Research Station for Gas Tractor Development of the Reich Board for Scientific Farming have made a tremendously important contribution here. As a result of extensive and systematic experimentation, the possibility for the use of soft-wood and of very damp wood, plus improved heating value, have been announced by this German Research Station. The amazing result was reached that wood containing over 40 per cent water can be gasified with good output and quite sufficient reliability. This is done by means of a carefully-designed gas purifier plant in which glass wool has shown itself to be excellently suited, especially for the light, fine dust of soft-wood.

The heating part of the gas producer was also further developed and the slightest losses in radiation heat were avoided by installing high grade insulation and using a double mantle. This also implies the full utilization of all existing heat for the pre-drying of the wood in the bunker—as with exhaust heat, for instance. The test results have already been in part carried out in practice and have further increased the achievements and the efficiency of the German wood gas producer for agricultural tractors.

Extra Fertilizing in Vineyard

In addition to the fall and spring vegetable fertilizing, it is advisable to have an extra fertilizing, as new experiments of the German Reichsnahrstand (Reich Food Estate of the Ministry of Agriculture) have shown. The adding of only a small amount of manure speeds up the action of the vegetable fertilizer considerably and increases its effects. The detrimental effects of the spring vegetable fertilizing can be avoided by the addition of 90 to 175 pounds of calcium cyanamide or calcium carbamide per acre and a little caustic lime. An addition of from 4,400 to 11,000 pounds of manure per acre brings out the full benefits of this type of fertilizing which has only recently come into full recognition.

Scientific Farming

In order to really clearly show the advantages of using potato clearers and multiple implements, the Reich Board for Scientific Farming has undertaken experiments in a 20-acre farm divided up into 47 field and 36 meadow plots. Planting was then done with the help of multiple machines and potato clearers. Beets were planted on seven, potatoes on six plots. With the beets, there resulted a saving of human labor amounting to 26 per cent, and with the potatoes of 50 per cent. The number of team working hours was somewhat higher in both cases; however, this can also be cut down by the use of balloon tired field wagons.

Modesty

Mrs. Black was vigorously powdering her face before going out.

"Why do you go to all this trouble?" asked her husband, who was waiting impatiently.

"Modesty, my dear," was the reply. "I've no desire to shine in public!"—Tit-Bits.

HIDAKA RECOGNIZED FOR CHINA EFFORTS

Former Councilor at Nanking Embassy Promoted to Post of Minister-at-Large for China

Mr. Shinrokuro Hidaka, councilor of the Japanese Embassy in Nanking, has been appointed Japanese Minister at-large to China, according to Domei. The appointment will be formally announced in a day or two.

Mr. Hidaka contributed much toward the conclusion of the basic treaty between Japan and the new National Government of China, as chief of the members of the suite of General Nobuyuki Abe, former Japanese Ambassador plenipotentiary to China, it is recalled.

Mr. Hidaka is known as an expert of China problems and commands respects among all the leaders of the Nanking Government. Much is expected of his future activities for promoting friendship between Japan and China, as Japanese Minister-at-large to Nanking.

Born in Fukuoka, Mr. Hidaka was graduated from the Jurisprudence Department of the Tokyo Imperial University in 1919. After serving at various Japanese Embassies and Legations in Europe, he was appointed first secretary of the Japanese Legation and Consul-General at Nanking, concurrently, in May 1933, from which time, his close reletion with China began.

He became chief of the personne section of the Foreign Office in 1934 was again appointed to Nanking as councilor of the Japanese Embassy in April 1937, and tried his best to ease the tense situation between Japan and China, under Mr. Shigeru Kawagoye, former Ambassador to China.

Even after the outbreak of the present China affair in July 1937 and the hostilities extended to Shanghai, Mr. Hidaka stayed in Nanking to the last, doing his duty as a diplomat.

He exerted active efforts for restoration of peace in China as chief of the economic affairs section of the China Affairs Board, after which he was appointed chief of the member of the suite to General Abe, former Ambassador plenipotentiary to Nanking.

He continued to stay in Nanking after the conclusion of the Sino-Japanese basic treaty last November, and has been assisting present Japanese Ambassador Kumataro Honda as chief councilor of the Embassy until his recent appointment.

POPULAR ESTEEM FOR WILLKIE RISING

He Is Better Liked by Voters Now Than During the Campaign, Gallup Survey Finds

A nation-wide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion on March 2 indicated that Mr. Wendell Willkie has probably now achieved a wider degree of popularity with the rank and file of American voters than he did at any time during the Presidential campaign of last fall. Dr. George Gallup, the institute's director, reports.

"That fact goes a long way toward answering the political question as to whether Mr. Willkie's activities for aid to Britain have helped or hurt him with the public," Dr. Gallup says.

"Willkie has lost popularity with some sections of his own party. In the institute survey approximately one person in every four who voted for him last November says he is disappointed with Mr. Willkie now. Some Republicans go farther and say he would not have made a good President.

"But whatever strength the G. O. P. candidate has lost with some of his own supporters he has apparently made up in the goodwill of many of those who voted against him.

"The institute's survey, which was begun immediately after Mr. Willkie's return from England, asked voters whether their opinions of Mr. Willkie had changed since the election or not. Those who said they had changed their views were asked: 'Do you like him better or not so well as then?'

"From the nation as a whole, including some who did not vote last November or who voted for third party candidates, the replies came:

Like Willkie better	22%
Like him less	14
Haven't changed opinion	64

"Like Colonel Robert McCormick's Chicago Tribune, which condemned Mr. Willkie as 'the barefoot boy of Elwood' turned 'barefaced fraud' after the candidate came out in support of the lease-lend bill, a number of Republican voters bitterly attacked Willkie in the survey for 'changing his mind on war,' for 'coming out for war and dictatorship,' and for 'making peace with the Administration.'

"But some Republicans—as well as a substantial number of Democrats—said Mr. Willkie had grown in their estimation since the election. The vote on the question by political parties is:

	Willkie Voters in 1940	Roosevelt Voters in 1940
Like Willkie better	14%	31%
Like him less	24	7
Haven't changed opinion	62	62

"Since Mr. Willkie received only 45 per cent of the total vote cast for President, the institute survey inquired: 'Do you think Wendell Willkie would have made a good President if he had been elected last November?'

"Fifteen per cent of his own November supporters said 'No.' But 39 per cent of President Roosevelt's supporters said in effect 'Yes—Willkie would have been all right, if it had turned out that way.'

"The total answers from persons with definite opinions in both parties are:

Willkie would have made good President	60%
Willkie would not	40

MATSUOKA ADMIRED FOR FRANK SPEECH

Vindictive Utterances of British Ex-Envoy Cited by von Ribbentrop at Meeting

"American newspapers have said that I misguided Chancellor Hitler by saying England would never fight, having no strength for any war, but the truth is exactly the opposite for I was aware that England was determined to fight Germany," said Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, at the gathering of newspapermen at the Foreign Newspapermen' Club on March 28, at which Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka was also present, according to a despatch from the Nichi Nichi correspondent in Berlin, Mr. Teramura.

Besides the Japanese and German Foreign Ministers, Ambassador Ott, Ambassador Oshima, and Dr. H. G. Stahmer were present to meet the German and foreign journalists at the club

"I had always known that a war with England would come. American newspapers said that I misguided the Fuehrer by saying England would never fight, because it had no strength for war. But the reverse is true, for I was aware that England was determined to fight Germany, and I told Chancellor Hitler that if England ever fought Germany, she would fight tenaciously." said Colonel von Ribbentrop.

"Former British Ambassador Henderson to Berlin said in a lecture at Oxford: 'If I were ever asked at my death bed what I wished to say, I would answer that I would like to have a double-barreled shot gun. With one shot I would pierce through the body of Heinrich Himmler (Chief of the Gestapo), and with the other, von Ribbentrop. Then with the gun butt, I would knock Hitler to death. These are the words uttered by an Englishman who was once Ambassador to Germany. It shows how far England has degenerated."

Foreign Minister Matsuoka met many German and other Foreign newspapermen at the party, and to them he spoke fluently in English.

"One view is better than a thousand hearings," he said. "I knew the strength of Germany and was confident of German victory, but coming here, my conviction has been further strengthened." About his talks with Chancellor Hitler and Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop, Foreign Minister Matsuoka said: "We conferred together, with the foresight of one hundred years, one thousand years hence."

In regard to Japanese relation to the United States, Mr. Matsuoka said: "However one may be politically ignorant, he will know it is useless to challenge Japan in the Western Pacific."

Foreign Minister Matsuoka's strong conviction greatly impressed the audience as that if a veteran diplomat.

At the luncheon given by the Fuehrer on March 28 at his residence, where were present Marshal Goering, Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop, Navy Minister Eric Raeder, Marshal Walther von Brauchitsch, Marshal Wilhem Keitel, Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels, and other leading German officials, Foreign Minister Matsuoka took pains to explain the meaning of "Hakko Ichiu," and frankly discussed various topics.

"At the very moment when I delivered the address of withdrawal at the League of Nations in 1933, my mind was made up," he said. "That is to say, Japan was then destined to join hands with Germany. On that basis the diplomatic relations between Japan and Germany had to be made. But at that time, it was not known with whom the matter should be discussed. Then I believed it best to study a man named Hitler, leader of the State Socialistic movement that had just arisen in Germany. I asked the opinion of my American and British friends about Mr. Hitler, but all replied that he was crazy. But I felt that the German people who produced Goethe, Kant, Beethoven, Wagner and other great men would never follow a crazy man. With the progress of time, it has become clear that the opinion of my British and American friends was way off the mark.

"To those who are afraid of the destruction of the status quo the eager shouts for reconstruction of nations would naturally sound crazy. Thus I realized that Mr. Hitler must be a great genius of the twentieth century, and my conviction has been further proved by subsequent developments. I believed that some day I would be able to talk heart to heart with that man, and that opportunity has come now."

His talk was translated into German by Mr. Schmidt, and the audience, highly impressed with the frank expression of the Japanese Foreign Minister, said that none had ever talked of Chancellor Hitler so outspokenly.

CONFLICT MENACES GREEK ART TROVES

Distance From Front Is Safety Factor but Precious Articles Being Hidden Away

Hopes are high in Greece that the priceless Parthenon and its neighbor structures on the Athenian Acropolis are remote enough from military objectives to be safe from possible bombing and shelling.

Greek officials, meanwhile, according to a bulletin from the National Geographic Society, are hastily but carefully hiding away many of the finest pieces of ancient Greek sculpture, vases, bronzes, gold and silverware, jewelry, and other objects which constitute one of the world's richest heritages of art. American archeologists, some of them until recently engaged in digging up these precious relics, have contributed funds to help with the task of sheltering them from the threat of damage.

Athens is a storehouse of classical Greek art and architecture. Yet as the capital of Greece, it is subject to military attack by the Italian forces. Fortunately, neither the Acropolis, pedestal for the incomparable Parthenon, nor the National Museum, with its fabulous collections, is situated in a section of the city containing legitimate military targets. Athens' industry is chiefly concentrated in Piraeus, its port. Tatoi, Athens' military airport which was struck at the beginning of the war, lies about ten miles north of the heart of the Greek capital.

Remote From War Scene

Most of the important ancient ruins throughout the rest of Greece, and the local museums which house many of the art objects recovered from them, are remote from strategic war objectives. Delphi clings to the steep slopes of Mt. Parnassus; Olympia nestles in the pine groves of pastoral Elis; Corinth, Thebes, Mycenae, Tiryns, Epidaurus, Sparta, Bassae, Megalopolis, Sounion, Aegina, Delos, almost all the other famous centers of classical and pre-classical culture are situated in agricultural plains, on rocky or forested mountains and promontories, or on islands in the blue Aegean Sea.

Of the several museums in Athens, by far the most important are the National Museum and the Acropolis Museum. The latter, an unobstrusive, low, stone structure lying east of the Parthenon, contains a collection of priceless statuary as well as sculptures from the "Great Period" (Fifth Century B.C.) temples whose partly restored ruins still adorn the Acropolis.

In the National Museum, housing the bulk of the national collections of antiquities, is normally exhibited a rich assemblage of statuary and reliefs, vases, bronzes, figurines, gold and silver vessels, weapons and ornaments, jewelry and household utensils from Mycenaean, Archaic, "Great Period," Fourth-Century, Hellenistic, and Roman times.

Valuable Collection

Much of Athens' store of ancient relics has already been stacked away in caves, vaults, and scattered hideouts of various kinds. Because of the great numbers of objects, this modern treasure-burying effort consumes much time and money. But once lost or destroyed, all the world's wealth could not replace these superb creations, material inheritance from one of the periods of man's highest achievements of mind, heart, and hand.

If ground fighting in the Greek-Italian war should spread again into Greek territory, or if it should reach Italian soil, the fear of enemy reprisals in kind would probably protect the cherished archeological remains on both sides, except, perhaps, where they lie close to military objectives.

Liner Taken at Canal

Domei

CRISTOBAL, Panama Canal Zone, March 30.—Simultaneously with the seizure of 27 Italian ships in United States ports, the American military authorities here today removed 505 officers and men from the 23,255-ton Italian liner Conte Biancamano.

The steamer was recently detained here pending a hearing on numerous libel suits involving the ship.

It is understood the men removed from the vessel probably will be interned.

Rome Studies Case

Domei

ROME, March 31.—Though the United States' sudden action in assuming custody of 27 Italian vessels in American ports generally was regarded as bringing the United States closer to war, political quarters here today declined to comment pending the arrival of official communication from the Italian Embassy in Washington.

Unofficial sources merely pointed out that the United States' reason for taking over the ships, namely on the ground that the Italian crews of these vessels allegedly were "wrecking" the ships, constituted a vague justification. They gave no intimation, however, whether the Italian Government would take or is considering retaliatory steps.

At Morgenthau's Order

Domei

WASHINGTON, March 30.—All 27 Italian ships tied up in American ports were seized at the order of Mr. Henry Morgenthau Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of President Roosevelt, it was announced today.

Mr. Morgenthau said that the action was taken under executive order of last October under the terms of the 1917 Espionage Act, which, said Mr. Morgenthau, is applicable if foreign boats are destroyed and wrecked, thus tying up American harbors.

The seizure followed reports from Baltimore and Wilmington that the crew of on Italian vessel there was wrecking the ship's machinery apparently with the intention of forestalling seizure of vessel by the United States for British use. The Italian crews have been placed in the custody of the United States coast guard.

Mr. Morgenthau stated that the order of seizure includes the Conti Biancamano tied up in the Panama Canal.

Crew to Immigration Post

I.N.S.

BOSTON, March 30.—The coast guard authorities have seized the German tanker, Pauline Frederiche, and removed the crew to the immigration station.

It is also reported that the coast guard was ordered to seize the Arauca lying at Porte Verglades in Florida, the only other German ship now docked in the United States.

London Is Pleased

Domei

LONDON, March 31.—British officials today maintained silence over Washington's seizure of 27 Italian ships in American ports, but obvious pleasure was demonstrated by Whitehall that the United States had dealt another blow to the Axis Powers.

Observers, on the other hand, expressed belief that the Roosevelt Administration's action was aimed at preserving Axis vessels for ultimate British use. They added that the step furthermore prevents the possibility that Axis ships in United States ports would be used as tenders for Axis raiders and U-boats on the high seas.

GERMANY PREDICTS VICTORY THIS YEAR

Aerial Bombings on Ports Plus Submarines Expected to Defeat England

British defeat as the result of intensive German air and submarine activities is predicted before the end of this year, though it is difficult to say whether the final moment will come in summer or autumn, according to observations by German authorities, says Mr. Takeo Ohara, Nichi Nichi special correspondent sent to Berlin, in his dispatch published yesterday.

The spring offensive of Germany has only begun, but already fair results have been obtained, and the main attack on England will naturally consist of air bombing and submarine activities, he says.

"The recent German bombing of England is the most severe seen since the beginning of the war, and its objectives are the harbor facilities on the entire British coast and Glasgow," Mr. Ohara relates in describing the effect of the German bombings. "Glasgow is the second largest city after London, and to that city war and other important industries have been moved from the danger zones of London. To Glasgow, Germany has sent bombing parties consisting of several hundred planes. After Glasgow, were bombed Hull, London, Bristol, Cardiff and other large ports. Bristol is a great naval supply station, and has many provision and clothing storehouses as well as huge oil tanks. Most important there is the oil pipe equipment for supplying warships. All these were bombed.

Coventry Was Sample

"The great air bombing by Germany was that on Coventry. In one night, the great industrial city was laid to the ground. Since then the word 'Coventry' is used to mean the devastation of big cities by air bombing. The recent attack on Bristol was greater than the Coventry bombing, and the city was reported to have been 'coventred.'

"The former United States Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy witnessed the miserable devastation of Coventry overnight, and returning home much impressed, he has been speaking of the strength of German air forces and the weakness of England. What he said did not appeal very much to United States official circles, but facts are facts. Among many things, he said that there were several things difficult to understand in the present European war, and one of them was why Germany did not attack the ports of England, while it was clear that in the event of losing her ports she would instantly fall, as she was ever dependent on overseas. That bombing of ports Germany has now started with her entire strength.

"Mr. Kennedy also said that already England has lost half her merchant ships, and in respect to shipping tonnage England was in the crisis of life or death; and that as the German stock of offensive weapons was daily increasing, the aid of the United States to England was too late, and even though about 500 airplanes would be shipped from the United States to England monthly, there was the danger of transports being attacked and sunk. This observation appears to have been correct, and England is bound to totter; but some think England's defeat will not come very soon, while others believe it will. Predictions have all failed in the present war, but there may not be any doubt that the great decisive battle will be fought before the end of the present year.

Settled in Britain

"The Balkan front has been unfavorable to Italy, the great spring offensive having failed. But events in Greece or Africa are only side issues. The whole matter will be settled by the success of the German attack on England.

"These observations lead to the conclusion that the decisive attack on England is only a question of time. When this is accomplished all other matters will be easily solved. But current observations do not agree on the questions of the British navy and colonies in that event. In the event 45,000,000 British subjects are left on England under German occupation, will the British navy continue fighting, after running away to Canada, Australia, or Singapore? Most people answer negatively to this question. Once docks in England are taken away, the British navy will have no facilities for repairs.

"If England faces defeat, the United States is bound to participate in the war on the British side, and thus some say that the British navy will be united with the American navy when England is lost. That will be a step toward the amalgamation of the two countries, and the great British Empire will disappear. It is doubtful whether the Briton will willingly accept such a fate. There is also another view that when England is occupied and the new order is established over all Europe, Great Britain and the United States will continue fighting, with Africa as the main stage of action. But will the United States send troops to Africa? Can the Briton survive in Africa, after losing England? The downfall of the Great British Empire is too great a problem to permit any prediction of what might follow after that. But judging from the precedent of France which also had many colonies, it may be imagined that Great Britain will follow the example of France. That is to say, England, most of the British navy, and a portion of the Dominions would surrender to Germany, while the rest would either go to the United States or become independent. After the downfall of the great British Empire, the world will consist of four great blocs of Japan, Germany, the Soviet and the United States, in realization of the ideal of the present Axis Powers.

"Of course it might develop that England will not surrender as expected, and continue fighting one or two years more, with the effective aid of the United States. But even in that event, the prediction of the world being divided into big blocs will never fail. At present there is seen no sign of peace whatsoever."

BULGARIAN HISTORY FULL OF STRUGGLES

Major Conflicts Experienced Since Fifth Century by Recent Adherents to Axis

War is no stranger to the picturesque Bulgarian towns and villages, points out a bulletin of the National Geographic Society, for from the fifth century when the Huns of Attila burned a town on the present site of Sofia until Greek guns boomed across the border in 1925, the mountain passes and fertile plains of Bulgaria have been the scene of intermittent fighting.

Petrich, in the southwest corner of the country, was involved in the 1925 clash with Greece because it is one of the few frontier spots easy to penetrate. Forming a doorway across the mountainous border, it became one of the logical points for German troops as they spread out across the kingdom.

The town lies close to the Struma River, a straight, broad avenue running between the disjointed mountain ranges and linking the heart of Bulgaria and Sofia, the capital, with the Aegean Sea.

Threat to Greeks

From Petrich the line of Nazi units stretches eastward to Nevrokop and Melnik, an isolated mountain community famous for its wines. These towns are among the points in Bulgaria closest to the important Greek port of Salonika, on the Aegean, little more than 50 miles south of the border. Observers have considered the German move into Bulgaria as in large part a threat to Salonika.

The principal corridor to Greece east of Petrich is formed by the Maritsa River, which splits Greece and Turkey as it leaves Bulgaria. Just north of the junction of the three countries is Svilengrad, a center of silkworm culture, where German troops have also been stationed. It lies only a score of miles from Adrianople, Turkey's westernmost city of importance.

Farther up the Maritsa, along which some of the Crusaders of the Middle Ages made their way to Constantinople, is Bulgaria's second largest city, Plovdiv, also known as Philippopolis. An important railroad junction, it was once a military post of Philip II of Macedonia. Nearly a thousand years ago, the Russians burned it and tortured the 20,000 defenders. Now it is a community of 100,000 persons, but many of the streets still are narrowed by overhanging balconies of the old houses.

Nearly 100 miles to the northwest is Sofia, at the foot of Mount Vitosha. Known first as an ancient Thracian camp and later as a Roman colony, it survived nearly five centuries of Turkish occupation to become a modern city of a quarter million inhabitants. Narrow, muddy streets and squalid houses in the slums have given way to brick and stucco dwellings erected 50 years ago on order of King Ferdinand.

Slender minarets on mosques, however, furnish reminders of the past as does the very name of the city—taken from the basilica of Sancta Sophia.

The Germans entered Bulgaria from Rumania at several points on the Danube River. Largest of these river cities is Ruse (Ruschuk), an important industrial community of 50,000 persons. It has been a shipping center ever since the Romans used it as a base for their fleet on the lower Danube. In the mid-eighteenth century it was the principal market for exchange of goods between the Orient and the Occident.

Bulgaria has two principal Black Sea ports—Varna, near the northern border, and Burgas, whose harbor forms the deepest indentation of the coast. Although Varna is regarded as the country's best equipped port and its 70,000 inhabitants are nearly double the population of Burgas, the latter has enjoyed the larger shipping business in recent years.

Famed Seaside Resort

Wheat, corn, tobacco, attar of roses and other exports have gone from both cities not only to neighboring Russia and Turkey, but to Italy and western Europe. In return, tourists from many lands have flocked to Varna, whose fine sand and warm sun have made it renowed as a bathing resort.

Varna has had, in recent years, two distinct aspects. Its southern part is a thriving Black Sea port, while its eastern section presents the appearance of a most popular seaside resort.

The cosmopolitan appeal of this Atlantic City of the Balkans was reflected in the menus of different resort hotels which offered Bulgarian, Hungarian, Bohemian or German cooking. Only since the first World War has Varna become a popular watering resort.

The Danube River has extended an invitation to vacationists in a vast hinterland, adding to the broad appeal of seaside resorts the pleasures of a trip down the scenery-rich international waterway.

Around the quays clusters the old town, its crooked streets and general plan doubtless reflecting influences of the early settlement which dates back 2,500 years. The broad avenues and regularly laid-out areas surrounding the shipping center represent the growth of the city in comparatively recent times. Verna's population today is about 70,000.

The three major trunk lines covering Rumania connect at Bucharest with the railroad from Varna that crosses the Danube. This is the only railroad that crosses the lower river, using the famous bridge at Cerna-Voda, Rumania. Together with the approaches and the stone causeways across the neighboring marshes and meadows this great structure is fully 14 miles long.

Black Sea Port

The port of Varna also has direct connection with Ruse. The building of the railway to Sofia, with many branches connecting with other river towns, doubled the population of Varna in 25 years and made it the principal Bulgarian port on the Black Sea.

Under normal conditions, Varna carried on trade with the Black Sea ports by all the principal steamship lines, and also with Italy and ports of the eastern Mediterranean. Significantly, a cable connects with the Russian port of Sevastopol, Crimea.

Not until Varna began to lose its shipping business did it develop its resort possibilities. With the loss to Rumania in 1913 of southern Dobruja, which brought the Rumanian border within 13 miles of Varna, the port was shorn of the trade of a vast area of rich agricultural land with its wheat shipments. It gradually yielded first place on the Bulgarian coast to the rival port of Burgas to the south.

What effect the restoration of southern Dobruja to Bulgaria, last year, will have on Varna's volume of trade will depend largely upon the changed situation following the war.

approximately 12,000,000, is bounded on the north by Soviet Turkestan, on the west by Iran, on the south by Baluchistan and on the southeast by India and on the northeast by China's Sinkiang Province.

"A rising power of East Asia, it is aspiring to contribute to the building up of a new order of the world. The population includes Arian, Turkish and Mongolian races, which fact accounts for its good relations with the Japanese who are also Mongolian.

Industry Still Primitive

"Industry is still generally on a primitive basis, the country lacking in natural resources. It trades principally with India and in a lesser degree with the Soviet Union, Iran, Britain, America, Germany, Italy and Japan. The total amount of its trade is only around ¥100,000,000 a year.

"In 1939, Japan exported cotton textiles, tea and miscellaneous goods amounting to 5,000,000 rupees, while Afghanistan exported only a neglible amount to Japan. One of the aims of the Afghan mission's visit in Japan is to correct this one-sided trade situation.

"From 1936, Afghanistan has been trying to improve its unfavorable trade relations with other Powers, by reaching agreements or concluding pacts with Germany, Italy, Soviet Russia and India.

Whether the negotiations with Japan will succeed is open to doubt, judging from the current situation. But that country being an Oriental nation, the visit of the Afghan mission will undoubtedly promote goodwill between the two countries, which aspire for common prosperity in East Asia.

"A pact of friendship was concluded in 1930 and Ministers exchanged in 1934 between Japan and Afghanistan. The present Japanese Charge d'Affaires at Kabul is Mr. Shintaro Iwazaki.

"It is also recalled that the Japanese Government, at the request of the Afghan Government, sent a number of engineering, agricultural, architectural other technicians to that country. At present four Japanese engineers are there, engaged in irrigation work."

3,000 Gather at Kobe

Recreation Park in Kobe was the scene of an enthusiastic gathering of 3,000 industrial workers, carrying out various programs on Tuesday as part of the national ceremony of pledging their loyal service to the State, while the major program was being carried out at Uji-Yamada.

At 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, the representatives following an opening address by the chief of the labor section of the prefectural office sang the national anthem, bowed toward the Imperial Palace in Tokyo, and offered a minute's silent prayer for the war dead and to those at the front.

Mr. Saka, the Governor of the prefecture and the president of Sangyo Hokoku Kai, local branch, then read the Imperial Rescript granted on the occasion of the 26th centenary of the founding of the Empire, followed by felicitations by the chief of the Prefectural Police, and Mr. Kawasaki, both vice-presidents of the Hokoku Kai.

Finishing the meeting, a parade joined in by the women workers of the Kanegafuchi Spinning Mill and Koizumi Hemp Factory and led by a brass band, started from Recreation Park and went through Sannomiya and Motomachi, and to the Municipal Office, ending up at Minatogawa Park where they disbanded after three banzai.

PARKS TO BE BUILT FOR CITY'S DEFENSE

Green Pastures and Recreation Grounds Will Dot Borders Of City of Tokyo

A continental scene of sheep wandering in a great herds on green pastures will be seen shortly on the outskirts of Tokyo, the Kokumin reports.

Some time ago, the Government conceived a magnificent plan of building large parks at a cost of ¥25,000,000 around this city. It was to provide the people of the city with ideal recreation grounds as well as the places to safeguard them in time of emergency.

Although the materialization of the project has been delayed for some reason or other, the Government recently announced that it will first build a total of seven large parks on the outskirts of the city where the populace is rather thin, the traffic is not so heavy and at least 62 miles away from the center of the city.

The sites for these parks already marked out by the authorities are a 600-acre lot around Sunamachi in Joto Ward, a 997-acre lot around Toneri in Adachi Ward, a 600-acre lot around Jindai and a 650-acre lot around Kogane both in Kita-tama country, Tokyo Prefecture. Shortly, other sites covering an area of no less than 1,700 acres apeice will be selected by the Government.

Three Sections

These parks will be divided into three sections. The first will be used as the sites for new college and school buildings in the future, the second as the training grounds of youths and the third as the recreation grounds for general citizens.

In time of emergency, these huge tracts of green land will be turned into the defense zones of the city, but in time of peace, these parks will not be left idle.

The citizens will be invited to spend a whole day on fine Saturdays and Sundays in one section and sheep and cows will graze in another. In still others, various fruits and vegetables will be cultivated, and various plants which can be used as fodder will also be grown.

In one special section, covering almost half of the whole parks in acreage, the students of universities, colleges and middle schools as well as the members of young men's associations will stage sham battles, cross-country races and other sports events.

Students Learn Farming

At the same time, these students and association members will be given chances to make themselves familiar with farming practice by seeding, tarnsplanting and harvesting wheat, beans, and various vegetables and fruits by their own hands the year around.

On the proposed recreation grounds, a number of playgrounds, complete with pools and lawns, will be constructed. For the purpose of preserving the familiar scenes of the Musashino plain famous for its beautiful woods, oaks, zelcovas and other trees peculiar to this part of this country, will be kept as they are in these parks.

Automobile highways will also be built through these parks, and wide concrete roads connecting the parks with the terminals of inter-urban electric railway lines will be constructed at the same time.

According to the present plan of the Government, the construction will be started at the end of June this year and be completed in 1942, at a cost of ¥25,000,000.

Believe It or Not, by Ripley

AMERICANS ASK AID IN LEAVING BRITAIN

Willkie Companion Says They Wish Neutrality Changes to Enable Home-coming

Out of possibly 2,500 Americans now in Britain at least half are desperately anxious to get back to the United States. Many of these Americans describe themselves as constituting a "lost column."

Such is the purport of an article in the New York Times by Mr. John Cowles, President of the Minneapolis Star-Journal, who accompanied Mr. Wendell L. Willkie on his recent trip to Britain.

Except for those engaged in United States Government service (diplomatic and consular staffs, military and naval observers, etc.) and those doing official work of various kinds in connection with the war or acting as newspaper correspondents, a large majority of the United States citizens now in Britain would like to return to America.

The inability of this "lost column" to get back home arises from several things. Under our Neutrality Act not only are American ships forbidden to go to the British Isles but also American citizens are forbidden to travel on any ships in belligerent waters. It is, therefore, illegal for Americans now in Britain to take British ships back to America even though they may be willing to travel through the submarine infested waters at their own risk.

The only transportation now legally available from the United States to any part of Europe consists of the American Export Line ships going to Lisbon, Portugal, and the Pan American clipper planes that fly from New York to Lisbon.

Flights Often Canceled

The only route open from Portugal to Britain is the air service operated theoretically by the KLM (the Netherlands) airline, which is, of course, actually conducted by the British Government.

Although there is nominally plane service daily each way between Britain and Lisbon, many of the flight are necessarily canceled because of adverse weather.

The limited passenger capacity of this air service also allows only a tiny trickle of incoming and outgoing travel in comparison with the hundreds of people who would like to use it.

Other Suggestions Made

Another suggestion, although it contains obvious dangers, is that the United States Government might take steps to inaugurate airplane service from Britain to Lisbon so that the Americans in the United Kingdom would be enabled to get to Portugal, where they could take American Export Line ships to New York.

Another suggestion advanced by some of the Americans now in Britain is that the United States Government might publicly and officially announce to Germany that it was sending an American ship to Ireland to repatriate the Americans now in the United Kingdom, that the ship would be convoyed by war vessels of the American Navy and that any attack by German submarines or dive bombers would be met by an immediate American counter-attack.

Persons advocating this plan argue that such a public advance announcement would be sufficient to cause Reichsfuehrer Hitler to instruct his U-boats and dive bombers not to molest the American refugee ship and consequently it would be overwhelmingly unlikely that any incident might develop that would precipitate the United States into war with Germany.

Some of the Americans in Britain urging this suggestion point out that since the United States dispatched, quite properly, part of its Pacific Fleet to attempt to find and rescue Amelia Earhart, it is difficult to understand why part of the American fleet might not be used to help the 1,500 Americans now in Britain who want to return home.

Although the majority of the Americans now in the United Kingdom would be able to pay the cost of their transportation passage undoubtedly some could not raise the money.

Whatever method of repatriating these Americans may finally be decided upon, probably the transportation expenses of a considerable number will have to be paid in whole or in part by the Government.

The American citizens now in the United Kingdom all emphasize that the British Government has been sympathetic and helpful in connection with the problem of the Americans who wish to leave the United Kingdom.

They say that the responsibility for their predicament is due to the technicalities of the American Neutrality Act.

Serious as is the present problem of transporting mail and important passengers from America to Britain via Lisbon, it is by no means certain that even the present form of service can be continued much longer.

If Herr Hitler this spring invades and occupies Spain, many observers anticipate that he will subsequently occupy Portugal and thus make Portugal a belligerent nation.

If that development should occur, undoubtedly the Pan American clipper service and the American Export Line steamship service from New York to Lisbon would have to be abandoned.

If Ireland should not be invaded by Herr Hitler and should continue to maintain its present neutrality, one possible partial solution might be for the United States Government to revise its present regulations and allow Pan American clipper planes to fly from New York via Botwood, Newfoundland, to Ireland.

This is the shortest air route to Europe, and Pan American Airways operated such service in the summer of 1939 before the outbreak of the war required its abandonment.

In addition, instead of making a direct line, shortest distance flight from Portugal to Britain, the planes, in order to reduce the danger of being intercepted by the Germans, fly a half circle route far west out over the Atlantic to keep several hundred miles away from the French coast. This greatly increases the mileage, and the flights take seven or eight hours.

It is extremely difficult for an ordinary civilian to secure a seat on an airplane from Britain to Lisbon. Far more places are required for people on important or official business than the capacity of the planes will accommodate.

British officials, civil or military, who have duties in Egypt or South Africa or India, for example, as well as the personnel of the various war purchase missions to the United States, naturally must be given priority by the British Government in plane passage to Lisbon as compared with American civilians who wish to return to their homes in the United States.

See Lack of Home Sympathy

Some of the Americans still residing in the United Kingdom are bitter, probably unjustifiably, toward the United States Government for apparently not sympathizing more deeply with their plight and for not taking more aggressive action toward trying to help them get home.

It is true, of course, that Washington officially warned Americans in Britain to return to the United States before the war started, and subsequently arranged for various American ships to go to Ireland to pick up Americans there and bring them back to the United States.

Many of the Americans still in Britain, however, say that because they are businessmen entrusted with important responsibilities they were not able to leave Britain earlier, when there was still an opportunity for them to go.

They say that now that the war has developed into its present phase their business functions have contracted to a point where they can leave and they are anxious to get home.

Officials of the American Embassy in London and the American consulates throughout the United Kingdom state they have no legal power to give visage to American citizens authorizing them to leave Britain on British ships and travel through belligerent zones in violation of our neutrality act, and the British Government will allow no departures without such visas.

Suggest Ways and Means

The American diplomatic officials further say that the Roosevelt Administration recently asked the German Government to guarantee immunity against submarine or dive-bombing attacks to another American refugee ship that might be sent to Britain or Ireland, but that Germany declined to give the requested assurances.

Some of the Americans still in the United Kingdom make the argument that one tangible way to provide economic help to Britain would be to relieve her of the necessity of feeding the 1,500 or so non-productive Americans who want to get home. They suggest several possible solutions.

One is for President Roosevelt, by executive action or for Congress by joint resolution, to authorize those Americans now in the United Kingdom to travel from Britain or Ireland back to the United States, at their own risk, on either British ships or on ships sailing under a neutral flag, even though there would be no guarantee against German attacks on the ships upon which they were traveling.

PRESIDENT SEEN EVASIVE ON FINDINGS BY CURRIE

Won't Commit Self on Check-Up In Chungking to Newspapermen

Domei

WASHINGTON, April 1.—Although President Roosevelt took time out of his recent fishing holiday to read two volumes of Dr. Lauch'in Currie's report on the war strength of the Chungking Government, he has not yet had time to discuss the report with Dr. Currie, the President told correspondents attending the White House press conference today.

Dr. Currie, the President's administrative adviser recently returned to Washington after undertaking a fact-finding mission to Chungking on behalf of the President.

Mr. Roosevelt evaded an answer when correspondents wished to know whether the report was optimistic. He said to find that out they would have to go through both volumes of the document.

CURRIE'S PURPOSES STUDIED BY JOURNAL

America Fears Compromise by Chungking With Japan, Warns the Kokumin

What the leaders of the United States fear most is the growing tendency to compromise with Japan becoming more apparent within various circles of the Chungking regime. America, at the same time, is closely watching the development of the struggle between the Chinese Communist party and the Kuomintang, says the Kokumin.

That the trend in the Chungking regime to shake hands with Japan is gathering strength is well proved by the fact that many enlightened leaders of the regime are closely following the growth of the new National Government of China. They cherish in the bottom of their heart the idea of protecting China from European and American domination through co-operation of Japan and China, says the paper.

"Judging from the so-called dollar diplomacy of the United States, the meaning of the recent dispatch of Dr. Lauchlin Currie to Chungking as President Roosevelt's special envoy can be clearly imagined," says the paper. "His mission has been nothing but investigation of the potentiality of the Chungking regime to continue hostilities with Japan.

"Though President Roosevelt must be carrying out his Far Eastern policy on the basis of accurate and detailed information, he must at the same time admit that continuance of war between Japan and the Chungking government through American support to the latter is casting a shadow over the future of 'Chungking China.'

Keen Interest Shown

"The leaders of the United States are paying keen attention to the trend within various circles of the Chungking regime to shake hands with Japan and the struggle between the Communists and the Kuomintang which is becoming all the more severe. That is well-proved by the fact that Dr. Currie met Chang Chun, Supreme National Defense Commissioner of the Chungking regime, on February 18, after which he also conferred with Chou En-lai, representative of the Communist party in Chungking.

"Dr. Currie intended to sound out the real mind of General Chiang Kai-shek through his meeting with Chang Chun, in order to help Washington decide its attitude toward Chungking.

"It is also clear that through the conference with Chou En-lai, Dr. Currie intended to get the real situation in the fierce struggle between the Communists and the Kuomintang, while trying to find out the specific gravity of the two parties.

Soviet Should Join

"The attitude of the Communists toward the visit of Dr. Currie is generally understood by the organ paper of the party, which asserted that the Soviet should join the camp of Sino-American co-operation. The paper also said that the Communist party has a firm conviction successfully to carry out the unification of the Chinese race with the Three People's Principles advocated by the late Dr. Sun Yat-sen, in the face of all difficulties.

"The assertion to let the Soviet join the camp of Sino-American co-operation is noteworthy from the point that the Communists feared the Chungking regime would be bound by the United States, 'the Empire of the Dollar.'

"Meanwhile, the Communist army is steadily gaining its stand along the Yangtze, much to the distress of the Kuomintang. The headquarters of the Communists in Yen-an are still maintaining a rigid attitude against the Kuomintang. They demand that the Chungking regime carry out the following items as fundamental conditions for adjusting relations between the two:

Four-Point Demand

"1. Withdrawal of the recent order of Chungking to disband the new Fourth army.

"2. Raising the siege of the Chungking army against the Communists in various places of China.

"3. Admittance of the existence of the Communist party as well as its army.

"4. Paying fees for the Communist army.

"In view of the fact that the compromise of Chungking with Japan means Japan's southward expansion, tightening of the Tripartite Alliance among Japan, Germany and Italy, and exclusion of the United States from the Chinese market, the United States feels it most urgent to bind Chungking tightly. Here lies the second mission of Dr. Currie's visit to Chungking.

"During Dr. Currie's visit, Chungking is understood to have concluded various financial agreements with America, only because it wanted the aid of America.

"Such steps on the part of Chungking will become a permanent obstacle to the healthy growth of China, because it is the essence of dollar diplomacy to demand a reward," warns the paper.

WRITER APPRAISES AMERICAN MIGHT

Tremendous War Potential Only Beginning Realization; Japan Needn't Worry

The United States, even if it goes to war with Japan, will consider it wise to delay and resort to a strategy of attrition, in the opinion of Mr. Yoshitaro Shimizu, a Yomiuri writer. He says:

"At this time when British is crumbling, Japan is endeavoring to free the nations oppressed by that nation and build up a sphere of common prosperity in the East Asia.

"The United States, on the other hand, is assuming the role of a self-styled inheritor of British prestige. A clash between Japan and the United States is now held by many as inevitable.

"The Japanese navy does not fear the United States. The United States air force is not yet a formidable one. But this situation will not continue long. America's military budget this year is about $43,000,000,000 and the country is going to send military aid to Britain amounting to about $7,000,000,000. It is said that the United States will have to produce for those purposes arms amounting to about $70,000,000,000, which is about three times as much as all Japan's industrial output of all kinds.

"For this end, untold amounts of natural resources and industrial power are being mobilized. Peace industries are turning out war materials. Future outputs of American war material will be colossal.

"Strikes in America are no indication of a collapse of this mammoth military plan. Though America holds the largest amounts of gold the country has always had large numbers of unemployed persons. And the rise of war industry will absorb all unemployed workers in America. Strikes may be resorted by workers but they are far too negligible to destroy the basis of the country's war industry, says the Yomiuri writer.

"The war industry in America will begin to grow steadily perhaps beginning next year. Then how about Japan's?

"Under the present circumstances, it is difficult to develop Japan's manufacturing capacity to a large extent for the present, though Japan's industrial power may compare favorably with the United States' after the birth of the Co-prosperity Sphere in the East Asia. And that ideal will take scores of years to realize.

"Under such circumstances, it is easy to imagine that the United States will consider it wise to postpone a war with Japan two or three years and, if it really fights Japan, will use tactics of attrition. And precisely the opposite tactics will have to be taken by Japan," concludes Mr. Shimizu.

Japanese Press Comments

financial policy of the country will be clarified.

We are given to understand that Mr. Ogura is a man of the strongest sense of responsibility and that he is a diehard patriot. It is to be earnestly hoped that he will not disappoint us.

Reinforcement of Cabinet

MIYAKO

Reinvigoration of the Konoye Cabinet is being desired by the general public; the Cabinet itself hinted at the necessity, and as the result Mr. Ogura has been brought into it as Minister without Portfolio. Will the strengthening of the Cabinet end in his appointment, or will there be other changes in ministerial posts? This is not quite clear. The Premier himself said that he was not considering any further step, and his statement may not be mere eyewash. It is rather doubtful whether the addition of Mr. Ogura alone will serve to solidify the Cabinet. Evidently, his role is to effect unity among the ministers interested in economic affairs, and as he has publicly sworn to do his best in this respect, it is to be expected that a fair amount of satisfaction could be drawn as a result of his entry into the Cabinet.

Needless to say, prevailing conditions demand a more capable cabinet than the present one, but much more important is that the Government should stabilize the political situation and thereby win greater confidence of the people by carrying out dynamic politics through the closest possible tie-up among the leading members of the Cabinet. It is in this sense that the people desire strengthening of the Cabinet, because they do not want the political situation to jolt. Only a short time ago the Cabinet re-armed itself with the addition of Baron Hiranuma and Lieutenant-General Yanagawa, and now for the third time it has reinforced itself with the alignment of Mr. Ogura. Should actual results not be seen after these repeated rearmaments and the political situation should not stabilize, whose fault is it?

Reform of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association has been mainly effected, but it still remains to be seen whether or not the reorganized I.R.A.A. will secure increased popularity among the people and whether the movement will be more instrumental in aiding the Imperial Rule. However, with its large organization, comprising capable and great caliber men, coupled with the support of the entire nation, it is to be expected that the I.R.A.A. will be able to show quite some activity in the future.

If the Cabinet, with close team-work within and with the outside aid of the I.R.A.A. as a counterpart of the Cabinet, should conduct fresh and live government, stability of the political situation can be fully expected. That is what the people want in wartime.

Political Parties

Now that the I.R.A.A. has been reformed, it is only natural that movement for organizing political parties should be lurking, as it is. It is also only natural that the Government, admitting the justification of such movement, is pursuing a laissez-faire policy toward it, instead of trying to suppress it. In view of the fact that the people, fully cognizant of the trend of the times and therefore shunning to claim extreme liberty, are desirous of assisting the Government to enable it to display the highest statesmanship possible, it would be easy to imagine the character and the political platforms of such political parties, were they to be born. It is also obvious that such political parties would not commit themselves to disturbing social peace and order by uselessly opposing the Government. Therefore, it should try to steer the craft of state safely through the present world storm by complete unison of both Government officials and the people and by giving the people freedom of action.

Spiritualize I.R.A.A. Movement

It is rather strange that leaders of the I.R.A.A. should be emphatically denying spiritualization of its movement and that the people, too, seem to consider spiritualization of the movement as a sort of degeneration. We do not claim that the movement should confine itself to the spiritual field only, but we are of opinion that the Association in addressing itself to the people should try to sound a note of warning and to awaken sleepy people, attaching greater importance to the spiritual side. What is most lacking in some of our people at present is spiritual tension and public morality. The benefits to be derived from the awakening of the people to public morality and from strengthening their spiritual tension are much greater than any reform of any kind. Hence our ardent desire that the I.R.A.A. should commit itself to the spiritual movement.

Konoye Cabinet Starts Afresh

KOKUMIN

The determination of Premier Prince Konoye to continue to shoulder the responsibility of steering the ship of State through the present world tempest was professed to the entire nation in reply to an interpellation posed by Mr. Shoichi Miyake in the 76th session of the Diet. But the assurance of the Premier to fulfill the duties of aiding the Imperial Rule as long as he lives is no more than his personal resolve and cannot be regarded as a definite administrative fact. The people were greatly impressed with the grim determination of the Premier, which fact, in a way, supports the contention that the people entertained some doubt as to whether or not the Premier had such determination.

Between the period from October to November the Konoye Cabinet courageously made a diplomatic about-face by concluding the Triple Alliance and within launched the I.R.A.A. movement, thereby making a definite step forward in the reform of the national structure; from all this the people were led to believe that the Konoye Cabinet had really owned the indefatigable spirit and the valor worthy of the name "The Reformist Cabinet" given to it. However, the various administrations prosecuted by the Konoye Cabinet after the appointment of Baron Hiranuma as Minister without Portfolio and his subsequent installation as Home Minister, consequent upon the investiture of Lieutenant-General Yanagawa as Justice Minister, gave the impression that the Konoye Cabinet was groping in darkness between hesitancy and retrospection. And the people began to doubt if the Premier was really fully determined and had confidence enough to ride out the storms at home and abroad.

The Premier's replies to questions in the 76th session of the Diet were extremely devoid of brightness, and it looked as through the Premier were trying to compromise with the Diet. This gave rise to the conjecture that, with the inclusion of Hiranuma and Yanagawa in the Cabinet, the Premier doffed the reformist garment and decided to don the neutral dress made of the Konoye-Hiranuma mixture.

However, contrary to general anticipation, the Premier reorganized the I.R.A.A. with a Blitzkrieg demanding the retirement of Count Arima and other leading members of the Association, replacing them with Justice Minister Yanagawa and Mr. Sotaro Ishiwata, erstwhile Finance Minister. The Premier also effected a sweeping reform in the structure of the Associaton. While diverse opinions are being expressed regarding the structual and personnel changes, they are certainly noteworthy as an expression of the Prmier's determination not to give in. Time must be given for judging the suitability of the changes effected. In order to consolidate the Cabinet the Premier also added Mr. Ogura to the Cabinet with a view to effecting unity in the country's economic policy. The inclusion of Mr. Ogura certainly serves as a refresher to the Cabinet. Thus the determination of the Premier, instead of remaining as a mere concept, has been manifested in a concrete form, and the Konoye Cabinet has started afresh, which is certainly noteworthy.

ADDIS ABABA DRIVE STAGED BY BRITISH

Forces Closing Ring Around Italians in Capital of Abyssinia

United Press

CAIRO, March 29.—British forces driving toward Addis Ababa, the Djibouti railway and Asmara, yesterday were said to be closing a huge ring encircling approximately 150,000 Italian soldiers and colonists in Abyssinia.

The garrison from Harrar officially was reported in full retreat toward Dire Dawa, 37 miles north along the railroad. Italians also were attempting to evacuate civilians from Addis Ababa, it was reported.

Meanwhile, it was revealed that General Sir Archibald Wavell, Commander-in-Chief of British Forces in the Middle East, had witnessed most of the battle which resulted in the capture of Cheren.

Reports from Nairobi said a communique there announced that "north of Lake Rudolf, the South African Air Force bombed the administrative building and entrenchments.

"A troops train 50 miles east of Addis Ababa was machine-gunned. The engineer and fireman jumped from the locomotive and 50 or 60 soldiers also jumped when the train reached a stop," the communique said.

Cheren Attacks Described

United Press

LONDON, March 29.—Military circles here yesterday disclosed that British Indian troops staged the successful attacks on Cheren, Eritrea, from the west and south. Military authorities doubted whether a northern column participated, probably because roads were blocked.

"It was evident that a large part of the Italian garrison escaped by road and railway to Asmara, military sources said.

Fighting in Cheren, capture of which was announced Wednesday, was the most severe of the Italo-British African war, military sources said.

"It cannot be expected that British casualties will be on the same light scale they were in northern Africa," said military authorities.

Some of the British Indian regiments which captured Cheren were believed to include Highlanders who also participated in the capture of Sidi Barrani.

Military sources indicated that the Italians withdrew without resistance from Harrar.

Fighting in the Debra Markos area, in Abyssinia, was mostly carried out by Abyssinian troops under British officers, it was said.

KOBE PING-PONG FANS GET UNEXPECTED THRILL

Polish Star, Playing Incognito, Causes Near-Sensation at Shurakkan Hall

A near-sensation was caused among table tennis fans in the Shurakkan hall in Kobe the other night when it was discovered that the foreigner who was wielding such a mean paddle was none other than Samuel Schiff, world-famous Polish table tennis star.

Schiff had heard about the Shurakkan hall from some friends and paying it a visit, was soon amazing those present with his skill. It was not until he had defeated Ishibashi, Hyogo's number one singles player by a handsome score, however, that it was discovered that this mysterious stranger was of world ranking prominence.

Arriving in Japan recently, Schiff is now planning to proceed to Shanghai. Arrangements, however, have been made for him to play a series of games with the best players here.

Schiff has been Polish champion for the past five years, being ranked fifth best in the world in 1936 following the championship tourney which was held that year in Prague. Since then until the outbreak of the hostilities in Europe which brought a stop to international tournaments of this kind, he has played in all competitions representing Poland.

DARLAN AGAIN IN VICHY AFTER PARIS MEETINGS

No Action Likely on Naval Incident Pending Washington Negotiations

Domei

VICHY, April 3.—Vice-Premier Jean Francis Darlan today returned from his latest visit to Paris and immediately conferred with his closest collaborators. No statements regarding the meeting were made to the press, however.

The French Information Office reported that Vice-Premier Darlan, while in the former French capital, met Mr. Otto Abetz, German Ambassador plenipotentiary to Paris, and Count Fernand de Brinon, diplomatic representative of the Vichy Government.

Meanwhile, a German source declared that France is not likely to take action on last week's British naval attack on a French convoy near Gibraltar pending the outcome of negotiations between Vichy and the United States over food supplies for unoccupied France.

"I have to confess that I am not confident in discharging successfully the duties of vice-president of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association, but now that I have been appointed I will, and have to do, all what I can do for the nation.

"I think this is the right track for Government's officials to follow without fail. Officials, I believe, must perform their duties whether they like them or not, and whether they think they can discharge them well or awkwardly.

"This is an immutable belief of mine. Naturally, I will quit the vice-presidency of the association even tomorrow if I am told to do so."

Destroyers Leave Gibraltar

Domei

ALGECIRAS, Spain, April 3.—A flotilla of three British destroyers were seen today leaving Gibraltar and sailing in the direction of the Mediterranean while two other destroyers were seen sailing toward the Atlantic.

Thirty-five British freighters anchored in the bay of Algeciras off Gibraltar at the same time were seen maneuvering into position indicating that they were preparing to form a convoy and leave for an undisclosed destination.

DIPLOMATIC CORPS OUT FOR WEDDING

Many Dignitaries Present at Mason-Chapman Nuptials in Yokohama

The wedding of Miss Barbara Marion Chapman, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Chapman of Yokohama, to Mr. John Roderick Vaughan Mason of the British Embassy, Tokyo, took place yesterday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock at Christ Church, Yokohama.

The bride was given away by her father and wore a gown of white silk jersey with a long train. She carried a bouquet of white madonna lilies. The tulle veil was held by a coronet of seed pearls. Her sister, Miss Lorna Chapman, was the maid of honor and Miss Dian Lucy Fox and Martin Morland followed up the aisle hand in hand. The bridesmaids wore dresses of pale cyclamen net and carried bouquets of sweetpeas. Martin was in a white sailor suit.

Mrs. Chapman, mother of the bride, who returned recently from Canada especially for the occasion, wore a gown of blue and white sheer with a white hat and short veil. Mrs. Mason, mother of the bridegroom, was dressed in powder blue crepe with a navy straw hat. Both Mrs. Chapman and Mrs. Mason wore corsages of orchids.

More then 200 friends of both the bride and groom were present at the ceremony which was performed by the Right Reverend Bishop Samuel Heasleft. The Reverend T. P. Symonds, who assisted at the service, gave a short address. The flowers in the church were simply and charmingly arranged by Mrs Lepper and Mrs. Stagg in groups of white blossoms and arum lilies. Mr. I. Sykes presided at the organ and played the Lohengrin Wedding March as the bride and her father walked up the aisle. Mr. H. F. Feaver of the Canadian Legation was best man.

The cherry blossoms around the church were in full bloom, making a very charming setting as Mr. and Mrs. Mason left the church after the ceremony for the reception, which was held at the home of Mr. C. E. Meyer, who lent his lovely house for the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Chapman and Mrs. L. M. Mason received the many friends who had gathered to congratulate the young couple. Some of the lovely presents they received were displayed and much admired.

After the bride had cut the three tiered cake, and the British Ambassador proposed the health of the young couple, Mr. Mason thanked Sir Robert Craigie for his kind words and proposed a toast to the bridesmaids to which Mr. Feaver suitably replied on their behalf.

The bride was born in Yokohama and was schooled in England, returning to Japan three years ago. Mr. Mason is the only son of the late Mr. J. M. Mason and Mrs. Mason of Campden House, Burley Rignwood, England. He came to Japan in 1937.

The bride and groom left for their honeymoon amidst the cheers of their friends. Mrs. Mason's going away dress was of primrose yellow wool with hat to match and a cape of Capri blue. Mr. and Mrs. Mason will be away for three weeks.

Among those present at the wedding were the British Ambassador and Lady Craigie, the Brazilian Ambassador, the Belgian Ambassador and Mrs. Forthomme, the Governor of Kanagawa Prefecture and Mrs. Matsumura, the Mayor of Yokohama and Mrs. Nakarai, Mr. Koibuchi, the Greek Minister, the Colombian Minister, the Finnish Minister, the Portuguese Minister and Mrs. Fernandes, the Swedish Minister, the Australian Minister, the Egyptian Charge d'Affaires, the American Counselor, Mr. Dooman, Commander Smith-Hutton, Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Mr. Officer, Mr. Houstoun-Boswell, Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, Mr. and Mrs. Morland, Mr. Essin, Mr. and Mrs. Kolstad, Mr. and Mrs. Reushlin, Mr. and Mrs. Y. Matsunaga, Mr. S. Suzuki, Mr. F. J. Blyth, Mr. C. E. Meyer, Mr. Daniels, Mr. and Mrs. Lepper, Mr. and Mrs. Stagg, Mr. and Mrs. Fox, Mr. and Mrs. Ross, Mr. Lovely, members of the British Embassy and consular staff and many others from Tokyo and Yokohama.

In Brilliant Nuptials

Mr. and Mrs. John Roderick Vaughan Mason are shown here as they left Christ Church, Yokohama, yesterday afternoon after their wedding, one of the most brilliant in the foreign colony in recent years. Mr. Mason is on the staff of the British Embassy and Mrs. Mason is the former Miss Barbara Marion Chapman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs H. A. Chapman of Yokohama.

The German News Agency reported that Dr. Ivo Andritch, the Jugoslav Minister, has returned to Berlin after a visit to Belgrade but has not yet conferred with Colonel Joachim von Ribbentrop, the Foreign Minister.

Meanwhile, a Wilhelmstrasse spokesman stated that, except for a few officials, the German diplomatic staff in Belgrade has been withdrawn and that it is not known when Mr. Victor von Heeren, German Minister to Jugoslavia, will resume his post.

GUILTY OF FIRE DEATHS

New York Landlord Convicted for Tragedy in Chinatown Tenement

United Press

NEW YORK, March 30.—Mr. Leo J. Alexander, 56, wealthy son of a Civil War general, yesterday was convicted of manslaughter in connection with the deaths of seven Chinese when the tenement he owned in Chinatown here burned in June, 1939.

Mr. Alexander will be sentenced April 10 and faces a sentence of from 15 to 30 years in prison. He was convicted of failure to install fire escapes and fire retarding walls in the building. He contended he collected rents of only $3 to $8 weekly from Chinese living in the building and therefore could not afford to equip the building with fire escapes and fire preventive equipment.

Lou Nova Knocks Out Max Baer in Round 8 Of New York Match

Domei

NEW YORK, April 4.—Playboy Max Baer's hopes to stage a comeback and regain the world's heavyweight boxing title which he lost to James J. Braddock on June 13, 1934, were shattered tonight when he was battered into a technical knockout by Lou Nova in the eighth round of a bout held at Madison Square Garden. For seven rounds, Baer weathered the man-handling by Lou Nova, but in the eighth of the scheduled 12, Baer was floored twice by vicious rights and was bleeding so badly that the referee stepped in and announced Nova the winner. Max Baer won the world championship title when he kayoed Primo Carnera, gigantic hope of Italy, on June 14, 1934, at Madison Square Garden.

NEW WAY OF MAKING SUMI TO BE UNDERTAKEN SOON

Mechanical Method Requires 36 Hours for Process Formerly Taking Week

The old fashioned process of making charcoal throughout the country shortly will give way to a new mechanized method effecting economy in both time and labor, the Asahi reports.

The new process was developed by Professor Ihachiro Ito of the agriculture department of Tokyo Imperial University, who recently has succeeded in completing the method at the university's experimental plantation east of Mt. Kiyosumi in Chiba Prefecture.

Under the new method, wood first is dried in a distillation room, then is carried in a special cart into a kiln. The charring of the wood in the kiln is performed by a motor system employing charcoal gas. The air current inside the kiln is adjusted by a wind funnel. The kiln heat is registered on a thermo-electric meter.

Through the new process charcoal may be obtained in 36 hours instead of a week, as required by the old method. The time-honored way of judging the heat inside the kiln by the slight changes of the smoke color, known only to skilled laborers, will be of no use under the new system. It also will save labor to a large extent.

BYAS LEAVES JAPAN AFTER LONG CAREER

Well-Known Correspondent Leaves for Home on Heian Maru —Kagawa Also on Board

Mr. Hugh Byas, former correspondent of the New York Times and London Times, in Tokyo, who has been replaced by Mr. Otto Tolischus, was among the 230 passengers on board the N.Y.K. liner Heian Maru which sailed from Yokohama for Seattle and Vancouver yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Exactly 150 on the list were foreigners who were mostly refugees from Europe en route to America or evacuating long-time residents of Japan.

When interviewed by a representative of the Japan Times and Advertiser, Mr. Byas said that upon looking back at the 27 years he had spent in Japan, he could sincerely say that he has had an exceedingly interesting and very happy time. He said when he first came to Japan, he often slept on the floor with his Japanese friends, and due to the intimate relations he has had with them, he felt he understood the ways and psychology of the Japanese people quite well.

Asked what he thought of the changes which have taken place in this country during the many years he has spent here, the veteran journalist said he had seen wonderful progress in the social structure of the nation. On the other hand, he continued, it cannot be denied that in some respects Japan is experiencing marked deterioration.

Questioned in regard to some of the "big stories" he had sent abroad, Mr. Byas said he has cabled every single national event during the past 27 years, among which the coronation and funeral of His Imperial Majesty Emperor Taisho and the coronation of His Imperial Majesty the present Emperor were of particular significance. He mentioned that he had seen some 25 cabinets come and go.

Upon being asked what he thought of future Japan-American relations, Mr. Byas said that things had definitely turned for the better, and he sincerely felt that they would improve still more in the future. Questioned as to the reason, the correspondent said he really did not know. "It is strange," he said, "but it is a fact."

In conclusion, Mr. Byas said that it was the first time in his life that he "had absolutely nothing to do," and he was going to enjoy his first vacation. He had no definite plans ahead, and he was not going to do any work for at least six months. When asked whether he would ever come back to Japan again, or write a book on his experiences in the Far East, he said he had nothing in mind for the time being, but that he might write some day about the many happy memories he is leaving behind in Japan.

Another prominent passenger on board the ship was Mr. Toyohiko Kagawa, Japan's foremost Christian social worker, who is a member of the Japanese Christian mission to the America-Japan Christian Conference to be held at Los Angeles from April 20 to 25.

When interviewed, Mr. Kagawa said that the primary purpose of his trip was to try to better relations between the two countries through religion, and he expected to travel all over the United States after the conclusion of the conference. He said that he would be a "religious lumpen" while in America, and that he had no definite plans in regard to his trip there. In conclusion, he said it was his fifth trip to America, and as he has many friends there, he was sure he would be able to accomplish something in the line of serving his country through religion.

Mr. Kagawa was accompanied by Mr. Yoshimune Abe, head of the Japan Methodist Church, and the Rev. Kiyosumi Ogawa.

even maintained, notably by great priests of Shingon Sect like the revered Ji-en, that the Ways of the Lotus could be best revealed to a soul trained in the mysteries of national poetry. It is one record that Saigyo had early mastered the doctrines of Tendai and Shingon Buddhism, so most likely he had entered the realm of poetry through religious motives.

Tragic Separation

Apparently all went well with him and the privileged world he belonged to. One day in 1140 the young Norikiyo was walking homeward, after his day's duties at the Imperial Court, when he fell into the company of a kinsman, Noriyasu by name, whom he dearly loved and who also held a post in the Court, and they walked together talking as two dear kinsmen of a like age might. At home awaited his young wife and his little daughter, and Norikiyo quickened his pace as he came to a crossing and bade his friend "till tomorrow!" The next day, however, Norikiyo learned that Noriyasu had died during the night. Straightway he was resolved to quit the vanity of vanities.

He forsook his wife and daughter, his office, all his hereditary privileges and dignities, and donning a black garment and taking a rough hewn staff, took to the road as traveling monk, and so he remained all his life till he died in his 72nd year under the canopy of cherry trees through whose branches the full moon was peeping.

2 UNIVERSITY GAMES WILL OPEN SEASON

Meiji Meets St. Paul's; While Keio Faces Imperial Baseball Nine at Meiji Shrine Today

With the weatherman predicting clear skies, a near-capacity throng of more than 50,000 is expected to file into the Meiji Shrine stadium today to witness the opening games of the Tokyo universities "Big Six" baseball season.

In the curtain-raiser of the twin-bill, the defending champion, Meiji will face St. Paul's while the night-cap will have Keio meeting Imperial. The opening contest is slated to start at 1 p.m. with the second game getting under way approximately at 3.

Prior to the initial clash, an opening ceremony with music and the usual review of the squads of the league will take place from noon. Yesterday the teams proceeded to Meiji Shrine to pay their respects.

Of the two games this afternoon, the Keio-Imperial fracas is considered to be the more attractive. Of late, the perennial door-mat of the League, Imperial has pulled off some of the upsets which featured the otherwise tame race last year, one of the most notable being that of defeating Waseda behind the "controlled" pitching of Lefty Sato last fall. Erratic and at times, appearing miscast in this "classiest" of collegiate leagues, the Imperialities, nevertheless have managed to pull a surprise or two a season.

Upset Is Possible

Considering that Keio is one of the teams in the upper brackets, the Imperial nine, with practically the same members as last fall, may pull the first upset of the season tomorrow.

With a title to defend and a good record in pre-season games, Meiji is favored over the nine from St. Paul's. Lacking adequate replacements, especially in the pitching department, St. Paul's can hardly be thought to score a win over Meiji.

At any rate, today is the opening day of the Big Six season. To many it is the biggest event of the sports calender of the year and as such, the Shrine stadium is expected to be the scene of a noisy enthusiastic crowd.

As announced recently, the schedule for this season was prepared on the basis of the rankings in the preceding season. Consequently, tomorrow (Sunday) the same four teams that clash today will repeat their rivalry, with Keio and Imperial opening the double-header from 12:30 o'clock.

Pros Also Will Open

Play in the professional baseball league will swing into the second period, with a twin-bill at the Korakuen stadium this afternoon starting at 1 o'clock. In the opener, Asahi will face Hanshin and the night-cap will have the Kurowashi nine facing Taiyo.

With poor weather taking a heavy toll of the scheduled games during the last week, the Nippon Professional Baseball League has announced it's revised schedule for the remainder of the month. Besides the above games here, the double-header at the Nishinomiya stadium, near Osaka, today will have Hankyu vs. Nankai and Kyojin vs. Nagoya.

The revised schedule of games at both Korakuen and Nishinomiya follows, with the first named double-header under each date, to be played at Korakuen.

Schedule Is Given

April 12: Asahi vs. Hanshin and Kurowashi vs. Taiyo; Hankyu vs. Nankai and Kyojin vs. Nagoya.
April 13: Kurowashi vs. Asahi and Hanshin vs. Taikyo; Nagoya vs. Nankai and Kyojin vs. Hankyu.
April 14: Taiyo vs. Asahi and Hanshin vs. Kurowashi; Nankai vs. Kyojin and Nagoya vs. Hankyu.
April 15: Kyojin vs. Nankai and Hankyu vs. Nagoya; Hanshin vs. Asahi.
April 16: Taiyo vs. Kurowashi.
April 19: Hankyu vs. Kurowashi and Taiyi vs. Nagoya; Kyojin vs. Asahi and Hanshin vs. Nankai.
April 20: Nagoya vs. Kurowashi and Hankyu vs. Taiyo; Nankai vs. Asahi and Kyojin vs. Hanshin.
April 21: Kurowashi vs. Taiyo and Nagoya vs. Hankyu; Asahi vs. Hanshin and Nankai vs. Kyojin.
April 22: Kurowashi vs. Hankyu and Nagoya vs. Taikyo; Asahi vs. Kyojin and Nankai vs. Hanshin.
April 26: Kyojin vs. Kurowashi and Hanshin vs. Nagoya; Hankyu vs. Asahi and Taiyo vs. Nankai.
April 27: Kurowashi vs. Nagoya and Hanshin vs. Kyojin; Asahi vs. Nankai and Taiyo vs. Hankyu.
April 28: Kurowashi vs. Hanshin and Nagoya vs. Kyojin; Nankai vs. Hankyu and Asahi vs. Taiyo.
April 29: Nagoya vs. Kurowashi and Kyojin vs. Hankyu; Nankai vs. Asahi and Hankyu vs. Taiyo.

50 SOLDIERS ENTER SCHOOL

Training Begins for Wounded to Prepare Them to Be Teachers

The third entrance ceremony of 50 wounded soldiers into the Middle School Teachers' Training School for Wounded Soldiers at Otsuka, Koishikawa Ward, was held at 11 o'clock this morning, says Domei.

Under the presence of president of Military Protection' Board General Baron Shigeru Honjo and other persons concerned, the ceremony began with those attending paying their respects by bowing in the direction of the Imperial Palace and singing of the national anthem. Following the addresses given by Baron Honjo and the principal of the school, Mr. Motoichi Otaniji pledged their determination of starting afresh in life in behalf of his fellow students. The ceremony was concluded at about noon.

The school, which previously took from 10 to 15 wounded soldiers who have graduated from colleges for the two-years' training course, will accept graduates from middle schools, numbering 50 persons, for the three-year course.

Prelude to Good Sportsmanship

Prior to the opening of the Big Six university baseball series today, players from the six schools visited the Meiji Shrine yesterday to pay their respects. Meiji will face St. Paul's and Keio will play against Imperial at the Meiji Shrine stadium this afternoon.

JAPANESE OBSERVE FLAMES IN BALKANS

Hostile Fire Stirred Up by John Bull May Soon Be Smoldering Flame of Jugoslav Ashes

The Balkan hostile fire continues to attract unusual attention of Japanese critics and commentators, whose interest, however, subsists more in what is behind or beside the scene than in the situation now ablaze. As for the future development of the hostilities, they agree in concluding that order will before long be restored there under the Axis control. How Britain and the Soviet Union are playing or are going to play behind or beside the scene is an absorbing topic among commentators. Mr. Teiichi Muto, Hochi commentator, has the following to say in his recent article in the paper, according to Domei:

"To undertake active operations of mechanized corps in such a mountainous region as Jugoslavia, means diresome difficulties. And yet this is what the Germanys are now doing with the aid of their aerial forces."

Jugoslavia is now thrown into nation-wide confusion in consequence, and is destined to tread in the footsteps of Poland or Netherlands instead of surviving as a second Spain, thinks the critic, and this will considerably weaken the footing of Greece. With the exception of Turkey, the entire land of the Balkan States then will fall within the German sphere of influence.

But the game will not be at the end there according to Mr. Muto, who noting the craftiness of Britain that might at any moment release the dormant possibilities of the Soviet advance for action, warns the Axis Powers in something like the following strain:

Crafty John Bull

"John Bull is an incarnation of craftiness. He wants to blunt the edge of the German attack and to exhaust German fighting power at the expense of Minor European nations one after another. The longer the German front is extended in Europe he thinks it the better for Britain. For the only surest way for Britain to conquer the Germans is, according to the British belief, to have the Germans spend up their fighting power in suppressing the minor European countries' upheavals.

"The benefit as Britain calculates from such a status of Germany would be dual. For the more the German fighting power is exhausted, the greater would become the Soviet pressure on the Germans, and this in turn would put Britain in the more advantageous position in fighting against the Germans.

"But the Germans are well aware that their real enemy is, not in the Balkan States, but on the other side of Dover. They cannot be such fools, with all that much knowledge, as to overlook necessary preparations against what might be coming forth in the train of their success in subjugating Jugoslavia."

That Britain was behind the whole affair of Jugoslavian betrayal to the Tripartite Pact cause is a matter of universal knowledge, thinks Mr. Soho Tokutomi, one of the greatest critics Japan has ever produced, in his article printed in the latest issue of the Nichi Nichi.

Words Not Deeds

The British diplomatic success is always secured with words but destroyed with deeds, he says, and the present Jugoslavian affair is but an addition to the past numerous instances in point.

It is a fact that the Soviet Union has concluded a non-aggression pact with Jugoslavia on the threshold of the outbreak of hostilities in the Balkan States. But Britain could never commit a grosser blunder, the author stresses, if it were to suppose even for a moment that the Soviets would intervene in the Balkan hostilities.

"The Soviet policy is as it always is to sit on the fence watching the development of the environments, and as the Germans are expected to make quick work of restoring order in the Balkan districts, there can be nothing in the present and possible future attitude of the Soviets, that must give the Axis Powers any least amount of surprise, wonder, anxiety or concern. If what has occurred in Balkans is a misfortune at all, Chancellor Hitler will be sure to seize the first opportunity for turning it into a fortune."

The conclusion of the Soviet Union's non-aggression pact with Jugoslavia is after all for demonstration of its deep concern about the Balkan States, the Osaka Asahi points out editorially, and by no means for seeking a chance of action against the Axis Powers.

After dwelling on the political and economic factors that justify the Soviets' unusual concern about the Balkans, the journal tries to read no ultra motives against the Axis interest into what the Soviets did with Jugoslavia right before the burst of the present Balkan hostilities.

Soviet-German Set-Up

"The Soviet's predominant desire is the Germans' blitzkrieg, but the Soviets must be reminded that such an operation on the part of the Germans presupposes the stability of the Balkan situation. Whatever that may be, the latest development of the Balkan condition has nothing therein which threatens to worsen the Soviet-German relations. This will particularly be the case when the Germans are expected to bring to settlement the Greek and Jugoslavian problems with the marvellous rapidity that always marks the Reichs' operations."

As though endorsing the above noted theories of the critics and editorials, the Tairiku Shimpo makes a most rational approach to the question of the Soviets' future movements and derives a conclusion that enunciates the points above noted, in a strikingly convincing light.

The Soviet diplomacy is guided by at least four principles, the paper points out to begin with, these being:

Four Soviet Principles

1. Communization of the world being its ultimate objective, the Soviet Union is always ready to show goodwill, if not extending any positive aid, toward the neighbors under political coup d'etat of a nature partaking of social revolution.

2. To prepare against the possible attack from the Imperialistic Powers, the Soviet Union will seek the strengthening of its own power before it thinks of aiding the neighbors devoted to social revolution of the world.

3. During the period of preparations in question, the Soviets will avert hostilities as far as possible.

4. But on the other hand, they will welcome hostilities between the Imperialistic nations.

The above analytical survey of the Soviet diplomacy sheds sufficient light upon the past and future movement of the Soviets, the paper proceeds to observe, and that particularly well accounts for why the Soviet Union remains sitting on the fence amidst the growing activities of and temptations from the Axis and Anti-Axis Powers, and also why it shows such a serious concern about the Balkans situation by keeping itself in rapprochement with Turkey and Jugoslavia while it will not slight the German friendship.

THRONE AID SOCIETY WILL NOT MOVE NOW

Tokyo Kaikan Will Continue to Be Headquarters in Spite of Wide Criticisms Voiced

The headquarters of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association which has been reorganized on a smaller scale, will remain for the present the Tokyo Kaikan, Marunouchi, though criticisms are heard that the building is too luxurious for the purposes of the organization, says the Hochi.

The Imperial Rule Assistance Association which had five bureaus and 22 sections and a personnel of 450 has now only three bureaux and nine sections and a personnel of around 300. It pays a monthly rent of ¥20,000 to occupy the five-storied Tokyo Kaikan.

Though Vice-President Heisuke Yanagawa and Director-General Sotaro Ishiwata were at one time worried as to where to move its headquarters, they now appear to have resolved to stay in the Tokyo Kaikan for the present, because no suitable vacant building is available.

When the Tokyo Kaikan, the scene of many wedding banquets and a haunt of the elite Tokyo society, was occupied criticisms were loud that it was too luxurious for the purposes of the movement.

Mr. Ishiwata told the Hochi in this connection; "Of course we will move as soon as a suitable building is found. But what is essential is work and not the place to work in. Besides, moving directly after the reorganization may seem as a criticism of the leaders of the association before the reorganization."

EX-SHANGHAI TYCOON GOING TO CHUNGKING

Yu Ya-cheng Gave Chiang Start in Life at Broker's Agency

Yu Ya-cheng, a leader of the Chekiang financial clique, who fled recently from Shanghai to Hongkong, is rumored to be going to Chungking, says the Yomiuri.

The Shanghai financial leader is a benefactor of Chiang Kai-shek. It was he who found for General Chiang a position in a stock broker's agency which gave him a start. When General Chiang became the leader of the Kuomintang following the death of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, he supported his regime financially together with Dou Yu-sheng and Chang Tsing-kiang.

Mr. Yu was also a member of the Shanghai Municipal Council. Recently he was engaged in the importation of Annamese rice to relieve the poor in Shanghai.

The Chinese leader was lately reported to be missing and investigation revealed that he had left for Hongkong accompanied by his secretary, because his life was threatened in Shanghai. He is said to be planning to go to Chungking. Those who know his heyday in Shanghai are surprised at the report, the Nichi Nichi says.

TAKATSUKA SHINES IN OPENING GAME

40,000 Fans Watch Keio Defeat Imperial and Meiji Triumph Over St. Paul's

Lefty Takatsuka, of the Keio pitching staff, was the show yesterday afternoon as the Tokyo University Big Six baseball league got under way with a twin-bill at the Meiji Shrine stadium. Takatsuka portside flinger entertained some 40,000 fans with a 5-0, no-run, no-hit performance when Keio encountered Imperial in the night-cap. The curtain raiser went to the defending champion, Meiji, as they easily subdued an erratic, St. Paul's nine, 6-2.

Customers were early arrivers yesterday. By 11 o'clock in the morning, the outer garden of the stadium was well filled and when the navy band struck up the opening tune at 12:10, the majority of the fans were already in their seats. Following the paying of respects to the Imperial Palace, the Meiji and Yasukuni Shrines, the opening ceremony was followed in the traditional manner with the grand review of squads, led by last season's champion, Meiji.

In pitching the perfect game, Takatsuka allowed but two bases on balls struck out one and had perfect support from his teammates. How easily Takatsuka gained this victory can be seen in the fact that not a single Imperial runner reached second base.

With Takatsuka silencing the Imperial hitters, the Keio batsmen clinched the game in the second inning, by scoring three runs off pitcher Kita. While Kita was stingy with hits, his control was bad in this particular inning. He walked Uno to start the canto. Inouye hit into what appeared to be a perfect double-killing but Matsumoto fumbled and all hands were safe. Kita than relieved some of the pressure by having Betto tap into a fast double play, Goto, to Matsumoto to Kawabata.

Iwamoto then filled the bases by walking and the first run was forced in as Kita still was unable to find the plate and issued his third walk to Takatsuka. Then followed Nezu's timely bingle to left which scored two more runs.

Successive doubles in the sixth inning picked up another tally for Keio, Uno getting hold of one to left-center and Inouye promptly sending his teammate across with a deep drive down the left field side-line. The final marker was scored in the next inning as Kakehi followed his hit by stealing second and scampered in on Nezu's second hit of the game with a sizzler through third.

In the Meiji-St. Paul's fracas, the defending champion took a two-run lead in the initial inning and never was headed for the remainder of the game. Some poor fielding on the part of the St. Paul's infield gave Meiji two more in the third.

St. Paul's scored their first tally in the next inning only to have Meiji come back with another pair in the fifth. The final score of the game went to St. Paul's when they bunched a hit and two walks in their half of the seventh.

RITSUMEIKAN TO CREATE CHAIR ON WAR SCIENCE

May Ask Lieutenant-General Ishiwara to Become Vice-President

The Ritsumeikan University at Kyoto is planning to establish a chair of War Science in accordance with the current demand beginning in May, reports the Hochi.

Having decided to establish the new chair, the Ritsumeikan University, headed by Mr. Kojuro Nakagawa, will take steps soon to ask the Education Ministry to grant permission for its establishment. If things go smoothly, the chair will be created within this month, says the paper.

The creation of the new chair is intended to meet the national demand for completion of a highly organized national defense structure in the field of education.

Subjects of lecture under the proposed chair will include military strategies of the Occident and Orient, relations between war and economy, population problems and world geography.

As to the lecturer, the university is earnestly hoping that Lieutenant-General Kanji Ishiwara will assume the post. He is an authority on China affairs and a great friend of Mr. Nakagawa, president of the University.

Rumors have it that the Lieutenant-General will become an honorary president of the university.

Lieutenant-General Ishiwara, who is now in Tokyo, said to the Hochi Friday:

"I am worried over the rumor that I might become an honorary president of the Ritsumeikan University.

"But, if I am asked to lecture, apart from the question of becoming an honorary president, I will be willing to explain all I know. I am convinced that my favorite theory on ultimate war is still good today."

tions."

In another letter the French Naval Attache wrote that the Greek Premier intimated to Greek shipping owners to place their vessels at the disposal of Great Britain. Mr. Pol Lahalle here referred to those Greek ship owners who had informed him that the Greek Premier had told them that the British Government had requested to place one half of the Greek merchant marine at the disposal of England. He told the ship owners that he had to reject this request as it was contrary to neutrality. "But in spite of that he recommended to place Greek ships in the service of Great Britain as far as they were able to do so on their own account."

'41 Miss Thailand Will Visit Japan As Mitsui's Guest

Miss Suang Titra Karhanongda, 18, who was elected Miss Thailand for 1941, will visit Japan late in May at the invitation of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha's shipping department, the Asahi says. A daughter of Colonel Karhanongda of Una Province, Miss Karhanongda was voted the most beautiful girl in the country last year on the occasion of its Constitution Fete. She is the second Miss Thailand to accept the invitation of the Mitsui Company to visit Japan, the first being Miss Pisamai Tuti Pti, the winner of the 1936 beauty contest.

Kamakura Once Warriors' Home Lacks Old Color

shoji Temple once stood. Takatoki committed seppuku in the temple together with more than 870 of his trusted retainers at the height of a desperate situation when he and his warriors were routed by the invading army of Nitta Yoshisada. Many graves of distinguished persons of the Kamakura period are found in the cemeteries of small temples. The rock chambers and caves which are found at the foot of mountains are tombs and many of them still contain worn out tombstones and stone images of Buddha. But there were hundreds of thousands of less distinguished warriors who were killed in various wars and buried in a wholesale fashion. A thought of the war ridden Kamakura period inspires a weird feeling that Kamakura is a land of ghosts, the spirits of common warriors still haunting the old temple precincts hankering for their legitimate resting places.

Many tombstones and stone steps made out of stones quarried in the neighborhood of Kamakura, which are very poor in quality, have been either worn out and lost in the ravages of seven centuries or replaced with new ones. Temple bells, however, have endured the test of time perfectly. Several persons in Kamakura, who are well versed with the history of the city, organized a party recently to listen to the famous bells at various temples, which are designated as national treasures.

Tokiyori and Bell

According to a member of the party, the bronze bell at the Kenchoji Temple was cast by the order of Hojo Tokiyori, the fifth Hojo regent, who was one of the wisest and most energetic administrators of the Hojo family. The bell is about six feet and six inches in height with a diameter of four feet and eight inches. He said that it sounded like a cracked bell with a tremendous ugly vibration at first contrary to all expectation of hearing a sonorous long drawn booming. As he became accustomed to the mighty roaring of the bell, he said, he began to find in it something very powerful and energetic, which reminded him of the firm and vigorous administration of Tokiyori. He called at several other temples listening to the bells and was deeply moved by a thought that he enjoyed the same old music the great heroes, warriors and priests listened and meditated over.

After all has been said, Kamakura is of immense significance to students of history. Bushido, or the Way of Samurai, which corresponds to the chivalry of European feudalism, sprang from the spiritual and moral discipline of the Kamakura period. The unyielding spirit of the Japanese people has drawn much of its fire from the stern and inexorable spirit fostered under the military regime of Yoritomo and his successors. The strength of the modern Japanese army and navy owes a very great debt to the moral and spiritual traditions and discipline of the Kamakura period.

Peaceful City

Kamakura is to Tokyo what Nara is to Kyoto. The city today is peaceful, but in the hour of weariness, it inspires a feeling of sadness in this fleeting world of ours. Kamakura is conducive to contemplation for one who pretends to know something of Japanese history, but there is not much of anything there that is spectacular, imposing or impressive for him to gratify his senses.

Novel Exports

The latest items added to the list of Japanese exports are the newt and the loach or mudfish. It was recently reported from Nagoya that 2,000 Japanese newts and 20,000 loaches were shipped from there to the United States of America on board the K.K.K. steamship Shikano Maru.

Loach, the slimy, wriggling creature is a denizen of paddies and brooks. The fish figures prominently in Japanese cooking as a food of rich taste and high nutritive value. It is so slippery, when alive and free, that there is a common saying that loaches are not caught under the same willow tree, where an Englishman may say that a fox is not caught twice in the same trap. The fish has a pair of long feelers to which overgrown moustaches of the country schoolmaster pattern is often compared.

The usual way of cooking loach is to have them split open lengthwise, laid side by side on a concave-bottomed china pan, interlaid with small slices of burdock, and finally covered with beaten eggs. This combination is heated under fire to the desired consistency. The dish is euphemistically called "yanagawa"—a willow and a stream. The metaphorical idea is that the eggs form a stream and the fish its inhabitants, while the slices of burdock represent a willow tree casting its shadow on the flowing water. Many foods can be made more tasty by giving them pretty appellations.

The newt which is distributed practically all over this country is a genus of failed amphibians. The Japanese species is given the scientific name of Diemictylus pyrrhogaster Boie, whereas the English newt is known by the less imposing name of Triton. The Japanese species which is more like some fish than a salamander, which the British species is said to resemble, is darkish grey on the back and marked with deep red spots on the belly.

The newt, although not so highly valued nowadays, has always been known in Japan for its potency as a love potion. It is burned black and ground to powder. This black powder, it is said, is sure to win the heart of a fair one on whom it is thrown. But a better way is to let her drink it with sake. That its effect is just as good when applied on one of the stern sex is also proverbial.

It is commonly said that the love urge of the newt is very strong. By way of illustration it is told that if a male and a female newt are placed within a hewn off stem of bamboo with a node between them, they will break through the hard partition in three nights. On the fourth morning they are to be seen embracing. It is probable that this quality of newts inspired ancient pharmacists with the idea of commercializing their burnt earthly remains.

The newt is also valued for its mysterious power of keeping women chaste. The amphibian which is to develop such power must be caught only on the day of the Horse, the 5th month. The newt is fed on cinnabar until the same day of the following year. Then it is burnt and ground to powder. When this powder is rubbed on fair skin, red spots are produced thereon. These marks remain on the skin as long as the woman remains chaste. A faithless wife is at once exposed by the disappearance of the scarlet spots.

These are the reasons for which both loach and newt have been held high in the scale of human estimate in this country. It is not known why these denizens of Japanese waters have found a market in America. But the recipe given above of cooking the loach ought to be informative enough to impress its value on Americans. The account likewise given of the newt may also be sufficient to set many an American pharmacist busy over a new problem. Meanwhile, many Japanese traders have put newt and loach in their meditative pipes and are still smoking them. For they know that good quantities of phomone drugs are being produced by American chemists from the guts of fish exported from Japan. When American importers began to buy barrels of ill-smelling, repulsive fish guts, Japanese were quite ignorant of how much phomone potentialities were being disposed of as material for low priced fertilizer.

BRITISH BOOK TRADERS AFFECTED BY AIR-RAID

Publishers Strive to Form Organ For Joint Distribution

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON.—A co-operative experiment in book distribution, the greatest venture of its kind the book trade of Great Britain ever knew, has arisen from the ashes of Nazi devastated Paternoster Row and its environs—for centuries the heart of Britain's book trade.

When Paternoster Row, a long, narrow dark street off Saint Paul's Churchyard, was fired by Nazi bombers in the London holocaust of December 29, 1940 more than 6,000,000 volumes were destroyed, among them many priceless and irreplaceable treasures. The offices and warehouses of nearly a dozen well-known publishers were either totally destroyed or seriously damaged, and in this toll of literary havoc, Simpkin Marshall, wholesale book distributors of Stationers' Hall Court near by, lost every item in their stock of 3,500,000 volumes, together with their unique catalogs comprising a record of books published in England for more than 100 years past.

Yet before the ashes cooled, the essentials of a co-operative scheme for carrying on business had been worked out by the Publishers' Association which undertook to run Simpkins as a distributive agent for the whole trade. The name, the business, the goodwill, the vans, all that was left, were taken over and the work of distribution was carried on from Book Center Limited, a subsidiary concern of Messrs. Pitman.

Vital Link in Trade

Simpkin Marshall have long been a vital connecting link between publisher and retail bookseller. Their aim in the past has been to have every book in stock, or to know how to procure it quickly, so that when the man-in-the-street walked into a bookshop anywhere and asked for what might be an obscure title, the book-seller put it on his daily order form, and Simpkins, from their stocks and records looked it out and supplied it. About 10 per cent of the books sold by British publishers went through Simpkins' records. The firm had also developed a considerable export business. Crates bearing their name took British culture and scholarship to the remotest sections of the world.

The ownership and control of the new venture is permanently reserved for publishers and, through them, for the British book trade. The shares are held by a non-profit-making co-operative company.

The new company started of necessity with no stock and no premises. Instead of supplies of books being held centrally, therefore, the plan was for orders to be passed on to publishers and volumes collected and dispatched by a central agency. Four depots have been set up in London for the collection of these parcels from the publishers and their distribution to retailers.

Costs Reduced

It was expected that the smoother working and elimination of overlapping due to this amalgamation of publishers' interests would result in a reduction of costs, which may mean cheaper books for the man-in-the-street after the war.

Messages of goodwill and support have been received by the sponsors of this venture from many parts of the world, but most significant are those from firms which might, in other circumstances, have been considered "the opposition." Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son, for example, wholesale book distributors themselves, have given practical assistance in getting Simpkins' distributive machinery working again.

Thus was solved an entirely new set-up for the distribution problems of the British book trade. As for the publishers themselves, many had to start all over again after the great fire. And this they did with little or no loss of time. Messrs. Longmans Green and Company for instance, publishers since 1724, who had their city and Southwark warehouses both destroyed on the same night, next day carried on the publishing traditions of 200 years, in a small office in Surrey. A dozen or so titles of books for sale, had taken the place of the 6,000 they had the day before.

Old Firms Hard Hit

Other publishers whose premises were ravaged include William Blackwood and Sons, established in Edinburgh in 1814 and operating a London branch since 1840. They published George Eliot's Adam Bede in 1859. Messrs. Collins lost their office in Bridewell Place, but most of their stock was held in Glasgow. The offices of Hutchinson, largest firm of publishers in the world, were completely gutted. Their stock, however, was safe. They now have new offices in Princes' Gate, S.W., London.

Messrs. J. Whitaker and Sons, publishers for nearly three-quarters of a century of Whitaker's Almanack and the Bookseller, lost their records and orders in the fire and publication of the Almanack had to be postponed for a time while they secured duplicates. Cassells, in La Belle Sauvage, was saved by one of its own fire-watchers who dealt with an incendiary bomb after it had burnt through the roof.

The good-neighbor movement to offset all this destruction in the book-trade began the day after the fire. Publishers whose premises were spared offered sanctuary to less fortunate competitors, and printers and binders did all they could to help. So, in spite of it all, the compilation and printing of Spring Lists has gone ahead, and reprints of the works with a known ready sale have been rushed through.

ONNAGATA, FEMALE IMPERSONATOR, IS POPULAR IN JAPANESE THEATER

Man-Actress as Topflight Entertainer on Stage Has History as Old as Kabuki Origin

By SHIGETOSHI KAWATAKE

Mr. Shigetoshi Kawatake is a grandson of Mokuami Kawatake, the great composer of kabuki dramas in the late Yedo and early Meiji periods. A lecturer at Waseda University and also curator of the Dramatic Museum attached to the University, he is the compiler of Mokuami Zenshu (Mokuami's Complete Works).

Part I

From the April issue of Contemporary Japan

For the past three centuries and a half, the kabuki has been one of the most characteristic stage arts of Japan. Once during this period it seemed to have reached its apogee, and there has indeed been a certain decline in its fascination since. Nonetheless the kabuki still impresses the observer with its unique quality of beauty. Harmoniously unified in the kabuki are such varied elements as the realistic play, the dance play, the musical play, the puppet show and others, each of which contributes its own share of beauty; but behind each element there lies always the actor and the beauty of his art and makeup.

The kabuki was developed as a form of popular amusement during the Yedo period and has ever since been characterized by the especial importance attached to its actors. The audience is impressed and fascinated primarily by the actors and their performances, a fact which is particularly noticeable in the case of the onna-gata, or man-actress. The term onna-gata, or alternatively oyama, is applied specifically to actors who never play anything but female parts and cannot be applied in the strict sense to those who only occasionally take women's roles.

Feature of Acting

Specialization is a definite feature of kabuki acting. This springs from the importance attached to the actor as such, which gave rise to the view that each actor should devote himself to studying the roles he is most suited to perform. At first there were only two kinds of actors; namely those who played the parts of women and those who played the parts of men. The former, as mentioned above, are called onna-gata or oyama, while the latter are known as tachi-yaku. With increase of specialization, however, these two basic types came to be sub-divided into those playing old and young, good and bad, high and low people, etc. Some of these minor differences are ignored today, but on the whole the system of specialization is still strictly followed.

Onna-gata are divided roughly into fuke-yaku, or those playing the parts of old women, and others, who are sub-divided in turn into those playing young wives, unmarried girls, samurai's wives, harlots, etc. Different actors have concentrated on these different types, thus developing an art which, if it is narrow in scope, is remarkable on the other hand for its interpretative depth. And so today, the Japanese art of onna-gata acting is in its own way unique.

Of course, foreign countries have had and still have their men-actresses too. They existed, for instance, during the Elizabethan period in England. The parts of Julier, Ophelia and all the other young female characters in Shakespeare's dramas were taken by handsome boy-actors. And in China, even today, there are men-actresses such as Mei Lan-fang and many others. But in none of these instances has the art been developed to such an extent as in the case of the onna-gata in the kabuki.

The Symbol of Kabuki

Legal prohibition against employing actresses made it imperative for the kabuki in its early days to develop a system of female impersonation. The idea of men taking women's roles may at first thought appear very strange and unnatural, but in the kabuki the contrary is the case. In the art of the onna-gata there is a beauty that could not be achieved by actresses and there is also an element of more than ordinary realism. The onna-gata is, so to speak, the symbol of the kabuki.

The onna-gata tradition is thus as old as the kabuki itself. The beginnings of the Kabuki may be traced to the establishment of peace and order some 350 years ago after a long period of civil war. It was in the early days of the Yedo period that a woman named Okuni, of Izumo Province, devised a dance known as the kabuki dance which she showed to the public in Kyoto. And it is from this dance that the kabuki play is said to have originated. At first it was little more than a simple folk dance, but dramatic elements were gradually added, and it soon developed into a light comedy in which Okuni, playing a man's part, flirted with a teahouse woman who was portrayed by a male actor. This kind of kabuki is called "Okuni Kabuki."

In those days the meaning of the word kabuki was different from what it is now; it then signified extraordinary or eccentric drollery, fun and sensuality. Much of this element of prankish eccentricity was derived from the fact that while Okuni played male roles, the female roles were always taken by men. The appeal of this new form of entertainment was very strong at the time and Okuni soon had many imitators. Some of these developed the onna kabuki, or women's kabuki, in which actresses alone took part in what resembled superficially a ballet or revue, but was really a cloak for prostitution. This could only be regarded as a menace to public morals and so in the sixth year of the Kan-ei era (1629), the Government prohibited women from taking part in any public performance.

Forelocks Removed

Then the wakashu, or boys' kabuki, began to flourish. In this style of kabuki, which had developed side by side with the onna kabuki, all the parts were taken by handsome forelocked young boys. But here too there arose a threat to public morals, for homosexuality was the fashion in certain depraved circles at that time and these boys were subjected to temptations that many of them found it hard to resist. And so in the first year of Joh-oh (1652), the Government ordered all boy-actors to cut off their forelocks, which were felt to be a symbol of their abnormal manners. Their forelocks were accordingly removed, leaving them with a style of hairdress known as yaroatama, from which was derived the name of yaro kabuki.

Most of these boys subsequently became onna-gata and the development of their art proceeded simultaneously with that of the kabuki. It is true that in the more ancient noh dance, female parts were also taken by male actors; but they always used masks and never made any attempt to create a realistic effect. Hence it may safely be said that the history of the onna-gata is at the same time the history of the kabuki.

But the male sex remains masculine to the last. A man's physical constitution is fundamentally different from that of a woman. However hard an onna-gata may try to represent a woman, one may think, it must be a somewhat unnatural strain for him to make himself appear womanly. Yet a female character enacted by an expert onna-gata has a quality of beauty and also certain nuances that could not be supplied by a real woman. The most natural thing may be for a real woman to play the part of a woman, but this is liable to produce an effect of mere realism. An onna-gata can represent a more realistic type of beauty.

Two Man-Actresses

Among the first expert onna-gata, one may mention the names of Gonzaburo Itoyori, of Kamigata (Kyoto and Osaka district), and of Sakon Murayama, of Yedo (Tokyo). As they were both actors of the wakashu kabuki period, they must have been naturally handsome, and it is a definite fact that as onna-gata they became very popular. There was another onna-gata, whose stage name was Sennojo Tamagawa, who always played the part of girls in their teens from the time he was 14 until he was 42. It is said, however, that at no time did his audiences ever tire of him.

Tatsunosuke Mizuki, who appeared a little later, is said to have been like a plum-blossom in snow. His contemporary, Ayame Yoshizawa, was compared to a sleeping fuyoh (a kind of lotus) and is said to have moved the audience to tears when he enacted the part of a lovesick girl. Kikunojoh Segawa of a slightly later period looked like a real woman when he was on the stage, and the audience wondered how a furisode (a long-sleeved kimono) became him when he was nearly 60.

Kinsaku Yamashita the Second, who was popular toward the end of 1700, was looked upon as the greatest onna-gata that had appeared over a period of many years. Whatever female part he enacted, his performance was always full of beauty and loveliness. "To see him play the part of a young woman," it used to be said, "is sweeter than to take a meal under the vernal flowers or to eat dango (a kind of dumpling), while viewing the autumn moon."

Audience Charmed

Hanshiro Iwai the Fifth, who was one of the greatest onna-gata to appear in the most flourishing period of the kabuki, had such fascinating eyes that he was called "Me-senryo" (eyes worth a thousand ryo). He was particularly at home when playing the part of a young girl, in which roles he always commanded the applause of the audience. His portrayals of Osato and Osome were like beautiful pictures. Osato is the lovely daughter of a sushi-ye (dealer in boiled rice and other food flavored with vinegar), who is secretly in love with a personage of high rank; while Osome is the daughter of a merchant, who has fallen passionately in love with one of her father's servants in spite of the fact that she is to marry another man at her father's order. At 63 Hanshiro played the part of Yayegaki-Hime, a princess of a war lord. He looked so young and charming that nobody would have thought him to be so old a man.

Not Sailor-Like

The boy had shown such a degree of ignorance and mental obtuseness that the teacher was disheartened, and she finally asked sarcastically: "Do you know whether George Washington was a soldier or a sailor?"

"He was a soldier," answered the urchin promptly!

"How do you know that?" she persisted.

"'Cause I saw a picture of him crossin' the Delaware, and any sailor'd know enough not to stand up in the boat."—Montreal Star.

Boxing Federation to Sponsor International Bouts Again This Summer

By Sports Editor

Once again it appears that the Japan Amateur Boxing Federation has scored a "knockout" with the scheduling of the first Japan-Germany amateur boxing matches here for June.

According to local ring experts and officials of the J.A.B.F., the coming matches should certainly be the greatest fisticuff event ever staged in Japan. More so, than the tour of the French professionals here in 1933.

Though the German team members are yet unnamed, there are at least half a dozen fighters in each division with plenty of international experience and a long list of fights, who may be chosen to represent Germany. And, without a doubt, the Nippon leather pushers will be confronted with a tough job, thus assuring Nippon ring followers some highly exciting matches.

Good at Olympics

No less a ring authority than Mr. T. Shimoda of the Yomiuri and former coach of Nippon Olympic teams speaks highly of the Germans. He well recalls, in particular, the showing of the German simon pures at the 1932 Olympic Games in Los Angeles. At that time he accompanied the Japanese boxers, and one, Erich Campe, German welter champ handed a member of the Japanese team a thorough lacing. The German then went ahead to win the silver medal that year.

Mr. Shimoda was aware that his man was not beaten by a duffer, but a real champ. The fight, incidentally was over in the first round. From that time, Mr. Shimoda has fostered the idea of bringing a German team here, and took a leading part in bringing about the coming matches. It was his word plus the assurance of Mr. F. H. Handge, German boxing expert who has been a resident here since last summer, which convinced the J.A.B.F. that the boxers of Germany would provide the stiffest of competition.

A glance at the record of the German national teams, further impresses the might of the visitors. Since the outbreak of the war alone, they have engaged in 18 contests, with 10 victories two defeats and a draw. In terms of total matches, it draws out to 73 matches, 56 victories, 8 draws and only 9 defeats. Included in the victories is one over an All-American team.

Than in Olympic competition, it is recalled that the Germans in 1936 won two gold medals and two silver medals, which means two world champions and two runners-up. So can be said safely, that the Japanese will be facing some of the outstanding amateur fighters in the world.

Become Professionals

Also according to Mr. Handge, unlike Japanese professional boxers, the Germans only enter the pro-business after years in the amateur ranks. Thus such outstanding fighters as Schmeling, Neusel, Besselmann, Eder Pistulla rose from these national teams and were successful in the much tougher pro game.

So for the third straight year, the Federation will bring Nippon ring fans an opportunity of witnessing outstanding foreign simon pures. This past fall, it was the team from Hawaii which entertained and the year before, it was the collegians from San Jose College of California.

To Show Changes in Military Equipment

An exhibition illustrating changes in Japan's military equipment since the early days of the Meiji Era will be held at the Military Museum, Kudan, Tokyo, for a month beginning next Sunday, April 20, in commemoration of the 60th anniversary of the founding of the military museum falling on May 5. The remarkable progress the Japanese military system has undergone since its initiation around the Meiji Restoration time can be easily learned through the 300 articles to be displayed there. It will be divided into four stages of growth, namely, those of the Restoration Period, (around 1877), the Sino-Japanese War (1894-5), the Russo-Japanese War (1904-5) and the present age, covering about 80 years in all. Among the leading exhibits are a four-pound cannon in use during the rebellious uprising of reactionary elements early in the Meiji Era, the cannon-balls employed by the Kagoshima clan against the British fleet at the Bay of Kagoshima and the heavy black military uniform in use at the time of the Russo-Japanese War. About 12 dioramas showing the 60 years' history of the military museum is expected to be another feature of the exhibition.

French Writer Bidoux Will Leave Vichy For Trip to Japan

Mr. Henri Bidoux, noted French writer, will leave Vichy shortly for a tour of Japan and other countries in the Far East to gather material for his books, according to a special Asahi dispatch from Vichy. Sixty years old, and well known as a novelist, music critic, historian, painter, traveler and expert on military affairs, Mr. Bidoux is still in vigorous health. Receiving an Asahi representative at his Vichy home, the French writer said: "I am going to the Far East to see for myself the life, customs and morals of the peoples in that part of the world. "In my youth around 1890, I recall that Japanese modes were adopted by French literature and arts to revive them. The spirit of Japanese arts and literature taught us love of simplicity and nature. We were also taught love of honor and humility by the Japanese."

Kipp Made Vice-Captain and Haum Manager—To Create Mixed Softball League

F. R. "Bucky" Harriss was elected captain of the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club baseball team for the coming season at a meeting held at the clubhouse on Saturday afternoon. P. H. Kipp was chosen vice-captain and L. N. Haum was appointed manager. M. C. Cooke was elected coach, and he will share the duties of umpiring the team's home games with G. R. Edmondson. The latter, who is the committee member in charge of baseball, presided at the gathering.

It was also decided at the meeting to have a mixed softball league consisting of four or five teams, each squad to include men and women members. The players of the winning team will be the guests of the other participants at a dinner to be held at the end of the season.

At the women's softball meeting held prior to the men's, it was decided not to elect a captain as yet. "Bucky" Harriss was elected manager and coach, and Miss Maria Prohazka was appointed secretary.

The Yokohama Country and Athletic Club basketball team defeated the Yokohama Third Middle School's quintet by 50 to 35 Saturday afternoon on the club's court.

The home team, although minus a number of their regulars, gained an early lead and by half-time held a 28 to 16 advantage. Although the students staged a rally after the interval to reduce the margin to five points, the winners drew away toward the end to outscore the opposition by 22 to 19 in the second half.

Scrap Collecting In Full Swing

unsurrendered.

In the meanwhile, the Government, anticipating that those who, facing the present campaign for reclamation of used materials from the Government offices, may feel concerned for the future of the country's metal supply, a few days ago explained why the movement was started in the Weekly Bulletin regularly issued by the Board of Information, as follows:

This move is not the outcome of any positive dearth of metals in this country, but is staged rather as a temporary measure for obtaining enough scrap metal to be used for the national defense during the period to come before the intended wholesale alteration of the steel production system so far applied in this country is introduced.

Up till a short time ago, two systems have been in parallel use at most of the steel manufacturing factories. One is conducted with the use of scrap iron, while the other without it. Since, however, the latter method can only be run under a very complicated process and at high cost, the average factory has been in the habit of employing the former way.

This state of affairs in the factories has come to a standstill chiefly on account of the ban placed on the exports of scrap iron to Japan on the part of the United States, effected recently along with other measures apparently meant as economic sanctions against this country. Now it has become necessary for Japan to have a radical innovation in the process of obtaining steel in the factories throughout the country. At all costs, the system to be run without the use of scrap iron must be worked solely.

It is until this innovation is realized that the reclamation of used iron is a pressing need, so that scrap iron may be held in stock at home. This is the chief reason for the current campaign.

According to the Weekly Bulletin, the Government, through the decision of the Cabinet Council, announced the general principles to be followed by the interested offices on April 1, as follows:

1. Government offices and other public organizations should each inaugurate a group of officials to be responsible for the displacement of unnecessary metal articles.

2. All articles found dispensable shall be offered to the Japan Used Iron Controling Company or its agents.

3. Articles to be sold shall be assorted before they are offered for sale.

BIG LEAGUE SEASON UNDER WAY IN U.S.

Yanks, Favored to Cop American League Pennant, Blank Washington Senators, 3-0

Domei

WASHINGTON, April 14.—With President Roosevelt throwing the first ball, the big league baseball season got underway today as the New York Yankees and the Washington Senators met in the season's opener. The Yankees, favored to cop the American League gonfalon this year, blanked the Senators, 3 to 0.

Enjoying perfect spring weather, a capacity crowd of 32,000 people jammed Griffith Stadium and cheered as the President, who officiated at the opening game, threw his ninth "first throw" including the time he was Secretary of Navy in 1917, to Arnold Anderson, the Senator's freshman pitcher.

The Cincinnati Reds in the National League and the Yankees in the junior circuit were made the favorites to cop the pennant races by Mr. Jack Doyle, nationally known Broadway "price layer."

The Yankees were quoted 7-5 in the American League while the Cleveland Indians were rated almost on even terms at 3-2. The World Champion Reds were choice to repeat their runaway win in the National League at 6-5, compared to the odds of 9-5 quoted for the Brooklyn Dodgers.

The Detroit Tigers, defending American League champions, and St. Louis Cardinals, who finished third last year, were rated 4-1, for the third spot.

According to the betting, Mr. Doyle is standing pat on the National League finish of last year when the Reds, Dodgers and Cards ended up in that order. The American League seems to be in for some changes with the Yankees dishing up a brand-new nine, while the Indians will be as strong as ever with young Bobby Feller. The Tigers, however, may lose the services of Hank Greenberg through the draft, and without him the Tigers cannot be rated a winner.

The Men in White Play Ball

If you've been seeing wounded soldiers about the streets looking like they were going somewhere for a good time, then more than likely they were en route to a baseball game, for here they are at the opening game of their baseball league, which started at Meiji Shrine Stadium at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. And you wouldn't know those boys were wounded, the way they do play ball. In the upper picture, the batter takes the mound for a swing that is sure to bring a home run. In the lower photo, the rah, rah boys form a rooting section that would rival that of any college, what with cheer-leaders and all the trimmings.

Japanese Press Comments

pose, and the Neutrality Pact is the fruit of the naive realistic diplomacy of Foreign Minister Matsuoka represented in his statement "everything will be cleared up if we have a heart-to-heart talk."

Position of Soviet

Precautions have always been taken against Soviet diplomacy owing to its unfathomableness. The total lack of understanding of Soviet Russia on the part of the third Powers and the designs of imperialistic America, Britain and France to agitate war by using the Soviet Union as a pawn are responsible for the inscrutability of the Soviet diplomacy. The realistic diplomacy of the Soviet Union has been due to her desire to protect herself against this infidelity of the third Powers. This sentiment of the Soviet Union was laconically reflected in the statement of Mr. Kalinin made last November in the Red Army Political School, when he stated that the Soviet Union is a fortress which occupies one-sixth of the earth's surface, which is surrounded by unco-operative countries occupying five-sixths. The Soviet Union was looking hungrily for collaboration and understanding.

Mutual Understanding

The foreign policy of the Soviet Union since its revolution has been an incarnation of suspicions and cautiousness for her own protection and she has consistently pursued the policy of foiling the diplomacy of other nations. For the same reason Japan and the Soviet Union for many years had no chance to understand each other well and have had to grope in the darkness of a labyrinth of suspicions and misunderstandings. Inasmuch as realities dictate good neighborliness, friendship and peace for the two Powers, the last remaining things are to display sincerity of purpose and to understand each other thoroughly. Foreign Minister Matsuoka followed the courageous and naive policy of getting into the heart of the Soviet Union without the least idea of bargaining and at last succeeded in removing the sunken rock which existed for many years between the two. This understanding must be fully developed.

Clear Answer

The pivotal point of the Neutrality Pact is in the promise of non-aggression and the maintenance of strict neutrality in case either of the High Contracting Parties should be involved in a war. By dint of this Neutrality Pact a clear answer has been given to the question as to on which side of the fence Moscow will jump. The Kremlin has now unceremoniously turned its back on Washington which has tried to make a stooge of the Soviet Union for oppressing Japan. In trying to get into the good graces of the Kremlin London and Washington were motivated by the desire to push the Soviet Union in the way of Germany and Japan, but in the autumn of the year before last Moscow thwarted the policy of London and Washington by concluding a non-aggression pact with Germany, and it again has placed itself within a safety zone by concluding the Neutrality Pact with Japan.

Hopes in The Pact

The significance of the Neutrality Pact lies in the fact that it has laid a cornerstone for the construction of a new world order in that it has clarified the attitude of the Soviet Union toward the plot of third Powers to alienate Japan and Russia; that it has a promise of peace for Greater East Asia in defiance of the present troublous waters of the world, and that it has established a nexus among Japan, Germany, Italy and the Soviet Union. It is also most significant that the pact postulates respect of the territorial integrity of Outer Mongolia and Manchoukuo and their inviolability, thereby relaxing the contact point of Japan and the Soviet Union. It is to be sincerely hoped that concrete negotiations to be held on the basis of this pact will be conducted in the spirit of friendship and sincerity, which are the backbone of the Neutrality Pact.

KAWADA TELLS NEED OF PLANNED FINANCE

Capital Accumulation to Assimilate Bonds and Spur Productivity Stressed

Before a general meeting of the Financial Council held today, Finance Minister Isao Kawada emphasized the great importance of accumulation of capital and its planned use for the purpose of assimilating Government bonds, as well as for the purpose of effecting productivity expansion, according to Domei.

A condensed translation of the text of his speech follows:—

"Under the present economic conditions prevailing in Japan it is most necessary to place capital accumulation and its uses on a well planned basis for the purpose of digestion of Government bonds, as well as for the supply of necessary funds for achieving productivity expansion in Japan, Manchoukuo and China. This is one of the most important duties of the financial organs under the present wartime, and it is of the greatest necessity for the various financial organs to realize the greatest possible assimilation of Government bonds and supply of capital required for productivity expansion in conformity with the prevailing financial situation.

"This year the Government is preparing a capital control plan, and in order to make it still more effective, since the third quarter of the preceding year the Government has been making a quarterly control plan for the flotation of debentures. On the other hand, in October last it promulgated a Decree for Employment of Capital of Banks and Trust Companies for the purpose of effecting proper uses of capital held by banks and other financial organs. Thanks to your co-operation this decree is working quite satisfactorily. It is to be earnestly desired that you continue to endeavor to secure capital accumulation as much as possible, bearing in mind the object of this decree, and at the same time it is desired that you see to it that there is as little idle money as possible. In supplying capital, it is hoped that you exercise the utmost discretion so that supply of capital in non-urgent and unimportant directions will be withheld, thereby aiming at the satisfactory supply of funds for digestion of Government bonds, productivity expansion and to meet demand of an urgent nature.

Co-operation Said Needed

"In this connection I should like to call your particular attention to the matter of co-operation between the various financial agents. It has come to my attention that some of the banks are laboring under the misapprehension that to adjust capital by utilizing the Bank of Japan is contrary to the principle of managing their banking business on an independent basis. Such an idea is not appropriate under present conditions when the whole nation is going 'all out' for achievement of the national cause. It is to be urged that you discard such an outmoded idea, and direct your attention toward satisfactory working of the finance of the whole nation, instead of looking only for the satisfactory operation of the financial agencies in which you are interested, and you may rest assured that the Government will extend to you unstinted support and assistance toward the realization of the object in view.

"The Special Law for Capital Accommodation has been playing an important part in the supply of capital for productivity expansion. Since the enforcement of this law and up to the end of December last the total amount invested in equipment of enterprizes aggregated ¥2,800,000,000. A survey of the supply and demand of materials and capital under present conditions has convinced us that the roles played by the said law and other correlated economic laws are getting more and more important. In view of this fact, the Government will make every possible effort in future to supply funds to those enterprizes which are producing materials that are urgently required by the State. The Government will at the same time take every precaution not to create uneasiness in the economic market on account of tightness of the money market. At the same time it is earnestly hoped that all financial agents will see to it that capital is employed to the best advantage possible from the national viewpoint.

Loans on Planned Basis

"As already stated, since the third quarter of last year the Government has placed the flotation of loans on a planned basis, by dint of which ¥714,000,000 loans were raised in the third quarter of last year, while ¥530,000,000 worth of loans were raised in the fourth quarter of the same year, and in the first quarter of this year the Government has planned ¥647,000,000 loans. In deciding the amount of loans the Government endeavored to have the amount kept down to the minimum, taking into consideration the progress of the enterprize. Even then the amount is liable to reach a large sum, and for this reason the Government is making every effort to realize satisfactory flotation of loans by mobilizing Government funds.

"In effecting revisions to the National General Mobilization Law, the Government has also revised Article 11 of the same law. The object of this revision lay in the security of capital necessary for productivity expansion and other capital urgently required. By virtue of Article 11 of this law in its original form, the Government was empowered to issue orders to banks and trust companies for financing capital. The Article 11 has now been so revised that the Government is now in a position to issue orders to banks and trust companies to take over liabilities and to guarantee loans. In other words, Article 11 in its original form provided for financing at the instructions of the Government, but with the revision effected the Government is now invested with the authority to instruct banks and trust companies to endorse bills or to guarantee loans in addition to the authority to order them to finance enterprises. By virtue of this revision the Government expects to be able to enable enterprises to secure necessary funds and thereby contribute to circulation of capital.

"As to the Corporation Accounting Decree there seems to be a tendency to misinterpret that this decree is solely aimed at restriction of profits, but the real object of this decree lies in rationalization of division of profits earned, so as to place the management of corporations on a safe and sound basis. You will, therefore, see that the decree in question is not aimed at unreasonable limitation of profits. The control on the accounting of private corporations is entirely a new thing not only in Japan but in all other countries born of the necessity of the times, and until both the Government and the people get used to it, there will be a certain amount of inconveniences, but this cannot be helped. In view of the fact that this decree will have a great bearing upon the management of corporations, every precaution will be taken by the Government in enforcing it, so as to avoid a drastic change in the economic market and to avert shrinkage of production activities.

Mergers Seen Necessary

"On this occasion I should like to say a few words in connection with fusion of financial agents. Under present economic conditions which are undergoing marked changes, the necessity for the merger of banks and mutual savings and financing companies is greatly increasing from the viewpoint of reinforcing financial organs. Accordingly, in places where banks and mutual savings and financial companies exist side by side, the Government intends to urge their amalgamation. However, the Government does not intend to urge amalgamation of these financing agents on the principle of one financing agent for each prefecture, but in some districts the Government may find it appropriate to have one financing agent in each district. The cardinal point is to effect fusion of these financing agents according to conditions existing in each district. Under the circumstances, it is requested that you co-operate with the Government to the fullest extent in this respect without being captivated by private interests.

"Along with the large spending program of the Government and the progress of productivity expansion the demand for materials is bound to increase, but with the present capacity to fill demand, it would be impossible to meet the entire demand immediately. However, as it is absolutely necessary to fill the demand of the fighting services, and for this reason supplies to the general public and other Government offices are liable to be narrowed down. Consequently, it will be necessary to tighten control on consumption in every field of national life. At the same time, it will be necessary for the Government to withdraw currency as speedily as possible, so that the money spent by the Government in carrying out the large budget will not serve to increase the purchasing power of the people.

"In order to secure smooth working of the budget and stabilization of the living of the people, it will be absolutely necessary to withdraw the purchasing power of the people. This in turn is necessary to encourage savings to the utmost. It is, therefore, earnestly desired that the people will re-examine their mode of living and lower their standard of consumption to a rational point with a view to increasing their savings."

O'Maily Reaches Moscow

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM COMMISSION PLANNED

To Prevent Disturbances Following Abolishment of Status Guarantee System

In accordance with the request of the Privy Council, the Government will shortly establish an Inquiry Commission of Revising the Civil Official System in order to carry out the new official structure, reports the Asahi.

The plan for revision of the civil official systems was approved by the Privy Council late last year.

The Inquiry Commission will be formed, if possible, by members of the Privy Council, officials from the Cabinet and the Governmental Ministries as well as from civilian circles.

The objectives of the Inquiry Commission will be to study the method of (1) disposing the disturbances which might be caused by abolishment of the system guaranteeing the status of the civil officials; (2) appointing economic experts among the people to the Governmental economic offices; and (3) disposing the problems regarding the treatment of officials.

THRONE AID'S PLACE IN PROVINCES FIXED

Conference of Prefectural Governors Hears Explanation of Function in Districts

With the fundamental policies for the system of provincial units of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association clarified by Cabinet leaders at the annual conference of the Prefectural Governors which ended yesterday, the Association will shortly launch its movement throughout the country.

Although the Imperial Rule Assistance Association headquarters consolidated its structure through the recent large-scale reorganization, some difference of opinion existed between the Home Ministry and the Imperial Rule Assistance Association regarding the system for provincial units of the Association.

It became clear, however, at the recent Prefectural Governors' conference that the system of provincial units will not be changed, except for the appointment of prefectural governors as directors of the provincial chapters of the Association.

Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye, Home Minister Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma, Director-General Sotaro Ishiwata of the Association, and Director Shigeru Hazama of the Sytematization Bureau, respectively explained this point at the conference.

Items Clarified

The items clarified at the Prefectural Governors' conference with regard to the provincial units of the Association are as follows:

1. Prefectural Governors will be appointed Directors of the provincial chapters of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association.

2. The system of the volunteers corps in the provincial chapters will be retained, while properly guided by authorities in its practical movement.

3. Out of the budget for the Imperial Rule Assistance Association headquarters amounting to ¥8,000,000, some ¥4,600,000 will be appropriated for the provincial chapters. Besides this, the headquarters will distribute to provincial chapters as much as headquarters can spare.

Study Youth Problem

4. As to the problem of the youth associations in provinces, although the force which may spring from the lower stratum will be used to best advantage, importance will not be attached to them only to make them the central figure of the Imperial Rule Assistance movement.

5. Pay for officials of provincial chapters will be properly considered.

6. Donations from the people to the provincial chapters will be accepted after approval of the Cabinet.

Mr. Shigeru Hazama, Director of the Systematization Bureau of the Association, said yesterday as follows:

"The Imperial Rule Assistance Association has Prefectural, Sub-Prefectural, City, Town, and Village chapters as its own provincial organs. But it has no lower organs than these chapters.

"Instead, the officials of the Tonarigumi (the neighborhood units) or the Buraku-kai (the community associations) will act as intermediaries of the Imperial Rule Assistance Association in the area assigned by the respective provincial units of the Association."

What of the Rialto?

which gained popularity years ago when the late Kanya Morita. Kabuki actor of note, played for the first time and since then it holds playgoers' interest whenever presented.

In response to the enthusiasm of the theater-going public, the Shochiku Theatrical Company will present a special program of kabuki drama at the open-air theater of Hibiya Park Saturday afternoon, this being the second performance attempted by the Shochiku. The previous performance was given in the same theater last fall with Uzaemon playing. This time Sumizo, Toshi, Ennosuke and Danshiro, four popular kabuki actors, will play in Shikoroppiki, an old classical drama, and Futari Sambaso, popular dance. If it rains, the performance will be cancelled.

Consisting of veteran players, the so-called orthodox group of the Shimpa theatrical empany, which is now appearing at the local Meijiza, will go to Osaka next month to play at the Kitano Gekijo there. Headed by Kitamura, Umejima, Kobori, Hanabusa and Fujimura, the company will bring several repertoire plays, including Ikiji (the pride), which is currently staged in Tokyo.

After playing successfully since the early part of this month, the Moulin Rouge at the Shinjukuza, will change the program from tomorrow. The new bill consists of four plays: Hadakagi (a tree without leaves); Musashi ni Maketa Otoko no Hanashi (the story of a man who is defeated by Musashi); Hitorigoto (a talk to oneself) and Spring Parade (a musical show).

The Japanese version of Cyrano de Bergerac, translated by Ryuichiro Yagi, will be staged at the Kokumin Shin Gekijo in Tsukiji from May 6 to 15. Actors and actresses of the Kokumin Ido Gekidan, which recently was organized by the Shochiku Company for the main purpose of making circuit performances in rural districts, will play.

A modern-school dramatic troupe known as the Gekidan Tokuritsu Butai will make an extra performance at the Takasagoza, a theater in Fukagawa Ward, from today. A new play entitled Waga Musume no Kofuku (the happiness for my daughter) will be produced.

Verdi's La Traviata will feature the program of the Fujiwara opera company to be given at the Hibiya Public Hall Saturday when it will be staged twice, one from 2 o'clock in the afternoon and the other from 7 o'clock in the evening. The role of Violetta will be taken by Kikue Takida and that of Alfredo by Yoshie Fujiwara. The other important players are Tochiko Takihara as Flora; Chieko Mori as Annina; Eiichi Uchida as Giorgio; Jiro Okazaki as Viscount Gastone; Hidekichi Hibino as Baron Douphol and Gisuke Tomita as Doctor Grenvil. The Chuo Symphony Orchestra under Manfred Gurlitt's baton will provide the music.

Aiko Saida, famous alto, who has been assigned to take the important role in Aida, now scheduled to be staged at the Kabukiza next month by Yoshie Fujiwara and his opera company, has postponed her recital, which was scheduled to be held at the Gunjin Kaikan on May 2.

Minosuke Wakayagi and his wife, Fuji, two popular dancers, will play at the Hibiya Public Hall at 2:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The program includes eight Japanese classical dances the feature of which will be Honcho Nijushiko (a kabuki dance) and Mochizuki (a dance adapted from a noh drama).

Jugend, an Ufa film, will finally be released by the Hogakuza, Taishokan and Musashinokan from April 22, it has been decided.

Yoko Uemura, motion picture star of Kyoto, recently arrived in Tokyo to play the heroine in a talking picture, Kurogane no Tsuma (the wife of a navy officer), now under contemplation by the Shinko Cinema Production Company, which is scheduled to be released in commemoration of the coming 36th anniversary of the Navy Day (the battle of the Japan Sea in the course of the Russo-Japanese War), which falls on May 27.

the censorship level from the cultural viewpoint.

A just and appropriate distribution of raw film for the use of motion pictures in April, May and June of this year will be made as a result that the increased production of about 7 per cent will be possible, reports Domei. After discussions about the ratio, negatives will be distributed, taking into consideration the production amount approved by the motion picture law as well as the distribution quota of November and December last year together with the marking system on the censorship, which has been conducted since January of this year.

With regard to positive film, the duplicate production amount of the various companies will be taken into consideration. In addition, the following methods will be adopted for the quota for civilian use:

Foreign motion pictures—Allocate duplicate negative for the production of the Japanese version and about six positive films to copy with when granting import permits.

Cultural pictures—Allocate negatives and master positive film to the licensed producers only. Allocate positive film for the distribution use only to the Japan New Eigasha to unify the distribution of culture pictures.

Educational and propaganda motion pictures—Distribute negative and positive film for the so-called educational and propaganda pictures of the public institutes, whose production and distribution have been recognized by the Government authorities.

American motion pictures unfit for the showing before children under the age of 14, as decided recently, are the revised version of Union Pacific by Paramount and Public Pays by MGM.

U.S. PUBLIC OPINION OPPOSES WAR ENTRY

Union Labor Faces Crisis in Speed Up of Armament Program—Living Cost Climbing

By Frederick V. Williams
Special to the Japan Times and Advertiser

SAN FRANCISCO.—Despite the passage of the Lease-Lend Bill and the aid being rushed to Britian, the majority of the American public are against this country entering the World War. The recent Gallup poll holds by 83 per cent that we should help England but not go to war. Not discouraged the British are steadily pressing their advantage. Their writers and lecturers are everywhere. They cleverly go before dinners and clubs stripped of any suspicion of being propagandists. The Germans have little or no representation and when they do appear are damned outright as agents of Hitler. Italians have disappeared from the American scene. The Japanese are favored over the Germans and the Italians here.

Union Labor in the United States faces a crisis in the speed up of the armament program. Its right to strike is being challenged. All things in America depend on public opinion. While organized labor had the goodwill of the public it was able to enforce its demands on employers by strikes. Now every strike is looked on with suspicion. The average man, as well as officialdom, regards strikes, especially in plants for war production, as the work of Nazis or Communists, largely the latter. As a result the one-time powerful radical leaders in labor are fast losing their grip.

Business, too, is beginning to feel the sting of war abroad and war preparation at home. With demands being made by the Government for sacrifices on the part of labor, the employers, too, are being taken to account. These, under the new rule, must be content with less profit, more production. The cost of living is rising gently. Taxes are beginning to be felt. On the public is dawning a realization that every time Uncle Sam gives away a few billion dollars the people must pay.

San Francisco's new Japanese Consul General Muto and Mrs. Muto have won the hearts of the Americans with whom they have come in contact here. Their grace and social charm made a deep impression and a most favorable one at the receptions which have been given in their honor. Consul General Muto is the guest speaker at The Commonwealth Club here. It is seldom that the Diplomat of a Foreign Power has registered so quickly and so well with the people here.

Japanese artists are being acclaimed in California. The works of five prominent Nisei painters are on exhibit at the Oakland Art Gallery for the annual exhibitions in oil. The artists are Miss Miyoko Ito, San Francisco; Miss Mine Okubo, Berkeley; Mr. Sueo Serisawa, Los Angeles; Miss Chiye Kuroiwa, Oakland and Mr. Henry Y. Sugimoto, Hanford. Japanese artists also figured prominently at the big open air exhibit held in the streets of the Latin Quarter in San Francisco recently.

Tales from Kojiki, Japan's oldest literature, are being translated by Mr. Takinobu Mihara, principal of the local Nihon gakuin, assisted by Mrs. Maurice Harrison, wife of a prominent lawyer here and leader in the Democratic Party. Mrs. Harrison a scholar, has been in Japan. Two years will be required to complete the work. The original dates back 1,300 years. The new book will be a popular translation based on Shibukawa's version of the classic. An English translation of Kojiki has been done by Basil Hall Chamberlain, but is highly academic.

In striking contrast to Canada, where Nisei are barred from the draft, America welcomes the sons of Japanese immigrants in her armed forces. The march of Nisei to arms in America continues and arouses respect and admiration for those of Japanese blood who are loyal to the country of their birth. As a matter of fact there exists little or no suspicion here of Nisei whereas there is doubt in some quarters of some of the sons of German and Italian immigrants.

Thousands of Americans are flocking to Golden Gate Park to see the Japanese Cherry Blossoms in full bloom. The Japanese Tea House and Garden is thronged with Americans. Here and there in the crowds an elderly Japanese lingers and dreams of the land of his birth and of his youth across the seas long ago. You see them every year, silent, lonely old men, deep in meditation.

Believe It or Not, by Ripley

BRITISH NOW WANT U.S. TO ENTER WAR

They Think It Would Be Big Blow to Germany and They Want More Naval Aid

By Joe Alex Morris

United Press

NEW YORK, April 12.—British officialdom wants America in the war tomorrow but makes the suggestion indirectly and cautiously. They believe it would be a devastating blow to the German people, a stimulant to conquered countries. They want more destroyers, more submarine chasers. They believe the war will be won or lost in the Atlantic.

The page boy snapped on a red light in the lobby of a London hotel and put up a sign that read: "Air alarm." Across the street a little anti-aircraft gun fired three staccato rounds at the end of the air raid siren's wail. Through the lobby drifted the even voice of a news broadcaster: "the Admiralty regrets to announce the loss of . . ."

Beside me a lanky, thin faced man who knows as much about British foreign policy as anybody outside the Cabinet tapped on the table for emphasis.

Views Have Changed

"We should be damn fools," he said quietly, "If we did not want the United States in the war tomorrow."

His words were typical of a change that has come over the privately expressed views of British officialdom as the winter war lull changed to bitter conflict in the air and on the sea.

It is a viewpoint that a visitor may miss entirely at first but which comes into bold relief as you dig beneath the surface.

Everywhere I went in England the first question asked by Cabinet Ministers, commanders of the armed forces, businessmen, soldiers, pub keepers and workers was: "What is the United States going to do?", and everywhere I asked the same people "Do you want or expect the United States to get into the war?"

For two weeks the answers seemed to be similar and to correspond to the official position originally put forward by Prime Minister Winston Churchill, that Britain wanted all material aid from the United States but not a declaration of war.

One night in an air raid shelter a policeman answered my question in almost the same words that had been used earlier at the luncheon table by "Lord B" who directs the activities of home guard troops in a vital defense area.

Material Aid Wanted

"What would we do, with an American Expeditionary Force?" both asked. "We don't need American troops and we dont want to have to feed them. All we want is material aid."

Then, as I prepared to leave England, I began adding up all of the answers I had collected. And in each reply, especially from persons in important government posts, I began to notice qualifications and changes. A trend began to emerge, a growing belief among well informed Britons that an American declaration of war was desirable, if not essential, to prevent a German victory.

Officially Britain's policy continues to be one of seeking all aid as rapidly as possible. But the beginning now of a new air and sea campaign that may be expected to reach unprecedented intensity this spring can only push forward the argument of those who favor American entry.

This is how that argument developed in my conversations in England with three influential persons:

If Germany Declared War

We had been talking for almost an hour when the departmental chief leaned back in his easy chair, gazed at the ceiling and asked. "Did you ever think that Hitler might gain the advantage by declaring war on the United States?"

Look out, I told myse'f quickly, the propaganda machine is about to start grinding.

"Well," my host continued, "I dont think that he will do it but sometimes it gives me a sort of nightmare feeling because it might be a master stroke to offset the possibility of an American declaration of war on Germany. If war were inevitable the Nazis might do it.

"But in any event it illustrates the effect that American entry into the war would have on German morale. It would not merely be a matter of bolstering British confidence. It would be a devastating blow to the German people who have not forgotten what followed American entry into the World War in 1917.

"It would have about the same effect on the other peoples of Europe. Britain would find things much easier with Turkey, France, Spain and even the occupied states. They remember too. I sometimes think that it would bring a quick end to the war."

British Questions

A few days later a man whose job is of great importance in keeping the British war production machine in operation interrupted my questions to ask a few of his own.

"How long will it take American industry to hit its war stride?" he asked. "Do you think it can be done in time unless the United States enters the war and puts industry on a war time basis?"

As he went on it became obvious that they were not so much questions as they were doubt. And these doubts were more impressive because were was a man who knew the problem inside and out expressing an entirely different view from that given me repeatedly by the average Briton who argued that American entry would cause the United States to keep war materials for her own defense.

"I wonder," he said, "if it will be possible for the United States to make her full war effort without a declaration of war.

First Line of Defense

"It also seems erroneous to me argue that America would hold back materials from Britain because if the United States were in the war Americans would be united behind the idea that Britain is their first line of defense and must be saved at all costs to keep the war on this side of the Atlantic. I think there would be more instead of less materials sent here."

The third and most impressive sign of the British trend of thought came from a man who had spent his life in the fighting services.

"We have the methods that will lick the submarines just as we did in the World War," he said. "But we need more destroyers and chasers to do it.

"If all other factors were ignored the need of Britain for small warships to fight the great Nazi U-boat and air siege would be enough to convince many Britons of the desirability of American entry into the war. In addition, merchant shipping is urgently needed."

There is no tendency on the part of British officials to discount the gravity of the Nazi siege, although it is not emphasized to the British public as strongly as is the danger of invasion. Destroyers and chasers cannot be turned out overnight but the United States navy could go into action in a hurry. And speed may be decisive to Britain this summer.

U.S. Naval Convoy

The possibility that President Roosevelt will trade more destroyers to Britain or that American warships will convoy party way across the Atlantic emphasizes the importance of bolstering the protection of British life lines. One argument advanced against American participation in the war is that the United States navy would be kept busy guarding the Pacific Ocean because of Japan's ties with the Axis. But in British minds the Atlantic is where the war will be won or lost. If it is won, the Pacific can be dealt with later. If it is lost, the Pacific wont matter to Britain.

In all of this the problem of an American expeditionary force is left in abeyance but nobody doubts it would arise eventually.

Air personnel might be of vital importance to Britain this summer but Britain does not want any American troops other than a possible token unit in the British Isles at present.

Campaigns in Africa and the Balkans present a different problem, however, and if Britain is to carry the war by air, land and sea to the continent at some future date there will be an urgent need for unlimited numbers of fighting men.

FLYING FORTRESSES REACH BRITAIN IN RECORD TIME

Boeing B-17 Planes Traverse Atlantic Safely Now Ready For Fighting Action

Reuters

LONDON, April 15.—A number or new type United States four-engined flying fortresses have reached Britain, beating all records in their flight across the Atlantic.

They are known as Boeing B-17-c's and are the first deliveries of this advanced type to be received by the Ministry of Aircraft Production. Shortly they will be flying alongside British and other types of American four-engined bombers to add further power to the growing weight of the R.A.F. bombing offensive.

The new flying fortresses are from the Boeing Seattle factory and incorporate important advancements. Its four Wright Cyclone engines each of 1,200 horsepower give its a speed of 300 miles hourly at 25,000 feet while at 220 miles an hour it has a range of 2,450 miles, which would enable it to fly from Britain as far as Arctic Norway, the eastern border of pre-war Poland or the heel of Italy and back.

It can carry a very heavy bomb load. It is 15½ feet high, 68 feet long and has a wing span of over 100 feet. It carried a crew of seven to nine.

Man's Bleached Body Is Found in Yokohama Harbor Near Buoy 5

Yokohama officials are investigating the mysterious appearance of a body almost bleached into a white mass of bones which suddenly came into view in the Yokohama harbor around No. 5 buoy at 7 o'clock Tuesday morning. Because the neck of the body was bound three-fold with a straw rope and two stones each the size of a man's fist were in the pockets of his trousers, it is believed by those investigating the case that the dead man met with foul play, probably about six-month's ago, as the condition of the remains indicated that long an exposure to the sea. An autopsy was soon conducted on the body in the presence of a public procurator of the Yokohama Local Court, which confirmed the suspicion with the fact that not much water was found in the stomach. The man was believed to have been a sailor living around Morioka City, as a handkerchief found on the body had the printed name of a certain inn in Kamaishi, Iwate Prefecture, and also a shop mark of a store in Morioka in the same prefecture was visible on his underwear.

U.S. STEEL AVERTS STRIKE BY 240,000

Grants Wage Increase of 10 Cents an Hour and More Liberal Holidays to Employes

Reuters

PITTSBURGH, April 15.—The United States Steel Corporation averted a strike called by the Trade Union Congress of Industrial Organizations for Tuesday night by granting a wage increase of 10 cents an hour and more liberal holidays to its 240,000 employes.

The increase dates retrospectively from April 1.

The new hourly rates will give the employes a weekly increase of about $4.

Labor Situation Better

With operations already resumed at the Allis Chalmers and Ford concerns, the labor picture is considerably clearer than last week. Increases of $4 weekly in wages were announced also by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, the Republic Steel Corporation of Cleveland, the Youngstown Sheet Tube Company and the Otis Steel Corporation.

The principal remaining threat is at the General Motors which has been given until April 20 to negotiate a new wages agreement with the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Southern mine operators expect the Administration to break the wages deadlock in the bituminous coal industry which has kept 90 per cent of the mines closed for the past fortnight, though sufficient production is forthcoming not to impede defense work.

All recent settlements, which have been executed individually, have almost invariably raised the wages and caused further unionization, as for example the Ford plant.

There has been one formulation, however, of general principles which would assure uninterrupted production, even of defense materials, and there is still some feeling in Congress in favor of direct prohibition of strikes in firms connected with defense work. The existence of this feeling may tend to exercise a restraint upon more aggressive labor leaders.

U.A.W. Threatens Strike

United Press

WASHINGTON, April 12.—Officials of General Motors Corporation yesterday telegraphed Miss Francis Perkins, Secretary of Labor, that the United Automobile Workers threatened a "general strike" April 20 unless a new agreement was reached with the company. Union demands included a closed (all-union) shop, said the officials.

Federal labor conciliators were being rushed to the scene. Should the U. A. W. strike it would paralyze a vast section of the United States automotive industry and tie up production on millions of dollars in national defense orders.

BLACKOUT PROBLEM STIFF ONE IN N.E.I.

But Volcanoes, Mountains Are Difficult Obstacles for Enemy Pilots to Dodge

United Press

BATAVIA, April 11.—Blackouts in the Netherlands Indies are not new, yet one recently concluded again proved that air raid precautions along the equator must be doubly efficient.

Air Raid Precaution authorities are faced with a problem that is nearly insurmountable, in that tropic nights are much brighter than those farther north.

Also, the sides of most buildings—and there are few not painted white—reflect the shaded house lights and street lamps permitted.

A full moon, and even starlight, brings out the cities of the Dutch archipelago clearly from the air.

Enemy planes approaching from the sea would have little difficulty in spotting salient points along the coast of Java.

Naturally, should an attack threaten, air patrols far out to sea would discover and attempt to intercept raiders. The navy and army air arms feel that they are fully capable of breaking up hostile formations bound for inland bases at sufficient distance from coastal cities to prevent blackout deficiencies from guiding enemy planes.

High Peaks Obstacles

But where the N.E.I. cannot bank on darkness and their own air forces to hide objectives, other considerations might make a possible invader think twice.

There are few large areas in the world as difficult to fly over as the Indies. Peaks tower into the night more than 9,000 feet, and mountain ranges dot Java from end to end.

Raiders seeking to bomb roads, ordnance factories, and military concentrations after dark would have to plot their way with the utmost caution.

Bandoeng, inland from Batavia almost 200 kilometers, is situated on a high mountain plateau. Here the Netherlands Indies army makes its headquarters. Supply bases of large magnitude are located near the hill station, and military establishments are nearby.

First view of Bandoeng brings to mind that so much material gathered in one place would become an ideal target for bombing raids, but natural defenses belie this observation.

Lofty mountains surround Bandoeng on every side. Bombing fleets would have to cross extremely dangerous mountain passes before spotting worthwhile targets.

In swooping low for spotting purposes hostile planes might easily crash into the many active volcanoes that surround the inland community.

Over Borneo enemy pilots would be flying above thousands of square miles of uncharted jungle. From Tarakan, on the west coast, to Java, the Dutch possessions are solidly arboreal, with practically no place to land in case of emergency.

Crashes Never Found

Often ships that crash on Borneo are never found. It is not unusual for search parties to probe the green wastes as long as six months before finding the shattered remains of an unfortunate flight.

However, Dutch navy and army pilots are as familiar with the virgin territory as frequent trips and long tours of duty can make them.

In an enemy did succeed in invading the west coast of the island before him would still lie a formidable obstacle—the flight from Borneo to Java.

Soerabaya, at the southern end of Java, is not as impregnable from the air as Bandoeng, but distances and flights over unfamiliar seas and islands present problems of major proportions.

Other air bases in the Celebes, Sumatra, and the Moluccas are well hidden. These always offer the danger of sudden flank attacks.

Australia Producing Bombers

Reuters

CANBERRA, April 14.—The first Bristol-Beaufort bomber to be made in Australia has been completed. The leader of the Labor Party, Mr. John Curtin, has made an appeal to Australian workers for national solidarity and a still greater war effort.

BELGRADE SURRENDERED TO 9 GERMAN SOLDIERS

They Held Jugoslav Capital for 11 Hours Until Major Force Arrived

D.N.B.

BERLIN, April 17.—How SS Company Leader Klingenberg and his eight SS men of a motorcyclist detachment of the SS Division "Reich" forced the Yugoslav capital with its 300,000 inhabitants to surrender on April 12, long before major German forces marched into the city, is described in an article in the "Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung" written by the German Military Attache, Colonel Toussaint, who had remained in Belgrade.

After having crossed the Danube the SS men, on foot, appeared at 5 p.m. in front of the German Legation in Belgrade, on top of which they hoisted the German flag. At the same time they liberated nine members of the staff of the Legation, who had been detained in the building. The SS men then, in two cars, drove at top speed through the main streets of Belgrade in order to show the inhabitants the presence of German soldiers in the city, and in order to prevent the mob from further looting.

At 7.15 p.m. the Mayor of Belgrade in the presence of the German Charge d'Affaires, the Military Attache and a number of Serbia personages, at the German Legation, officially handed over Belgrade to the Germans, after the SS men by a few shots had forced a Serbian company to surrender and lay down its arms.

Soon afterwards captured Serbian pioneers were ordered to construct a ferry across the Danube in order to facilitate the crossing of German troops on Sunday morning, which took place at 4.20 a.m.

Thus nine German soldiers for 11 hours held the entire Jugoslav capital, with tens of thousands of Serbian prisoners.

WASEDA, HOSEI OPEN WEEKEND BASEBALL

Meiji vs. Imperial Balances Afternoon's Program at Meiji Shrine Stadium

With Waseda vs Hosei and Meiji vs Imperial comprising the day's twin-bill, the spring series of the Big Six universities baseball season will swing into the second weekend of play this afternoon at the Meiji Shrine stadium.

Waseda and Hosei will mix in the curtain raiser scheduled for 1 o'clock. On Sunday, the same four teams will clash again, with Meiji and Imperial opening the double-header at 12:30 o'clock.

Much of the interest will be focused on the opening clash today, for both Waseda and Hosei will be making season debuts. The maroons of Waseda, trailed both Keio and Meiji last fall in the final season standing, but with practically an all-veteran team this season are considered a serious threat for the pennant. Their pre-season record is outstanding and with a line-up of hard-hitting outfielders should be the team to beat this spring.

Hosei, however, is not conceded to pull any upsets and is destined to end up in the lower bracket, together with Imperial, whose miserable showing weekend has just about assured them of the cellar spot.

Today also will see the opening games of the Tokyo University Baseball League. The league composed of Tokyo colleges and universities outside of the Big Six will commence play for the title held by Senshu University.

The opening day's schedule calls for three games, with the defending Champion, Senshu, crossing bats with the Tokyo University of Commerce nine in the feature game of a double-header at the Nihon University grounds at Asagaya from 1:00 o'clock. Nichidai vs Kokugakuin will follow at 3 o'clock, while Chuo and Tokyo Aggie will clash at the home ground of the Aggies.

Schedule Follows

The complete schedule follows:

MORPHIUM DISCOVERER BENEFACTOR TO MANKIND

Sertuerner, German Born, Was Given Many Distinctions Before His Death

D.N.B.

BERLIN, April 18.—The discoverer of morphium was a German, F. W. A. Sertuerner, who died 100 years ago. This "father of sleep," as his contemporaries called him, should be remembered with gratitude, especially in the midst of a war which more than in normal times, necessitates medicine and narcotics to allay pain.

From his early youth, Sertuerner showed a remarkable inclination for chemistry; as an assistant in a drug store, and later, as a druggist in Paderborn, he was in a position to follow up his studies which were chiefly devoted to the alkaloids. No tribute was paid to him, the autodidact, by his branch of science for his discovery of morphium in the years 1803 to 1805 when he was scarcely 18 years old. After the publication of his famous work "About Morphium . . ." in 1817, Sertuerner gradually made his way. His name became known when he successfully defended his case against a Frenchman who had claimed the right of first discovery, and when he was awarded a prize by the Institut de France in 1831.

He was recognized by science doctorates and even German distinctions were bestowed upon him, but the German special branch of science was not favorable disposed toward him. Embitterment overshadowed the life of the discoverer of such an important medical drug as the opium preparation which Sertuerner named Morphium after the god of sleep.

JOE LOUIS WAITING FOR NEXT BIG BOUT

Has Defended World Title 16 Times Since He Won It From Braddock in June, 1938

Reuters

LONDON, April 15.—Who is there left to challenge Joe Louis's supremacy as world heavyweight champion?

This sleepy-eyed youth, who thinks more of sleep, baseball and reading comic papers than he does of boxing, has now defended his world title 16 times since he won it from James J. Braddock in June, 1938.

As various challengers of promise have arisen, so have they been knocked down just as quickly, and some of them in record time, too. The only man who seems to have made an impression on Maestro Mike Jacobs, whose job it is to keep finding sacrifices for Louis's lethal punches, is the Chilean champion, Arturo Godoy. He has already faced "Jolting Joe" twice, going the full distance on the first occasion, and he is to be given a third chance in the summer.

He Doesn't Mind

Louis doesn't mind. He is earning easy money while they are trying to find someone to dethrone him. His earnings, after he had beaten Clarence "Red" Burman, his 13 challenger, amounted to about £440,000.

Most of this has accumulated from his last fifteen fights—and easy money it has been. From winning his title in June, 1938, up to the time he beat "Two Ton" Galento in June a year later, Louis earned money at the rate of £108 a second. At one period, his total earnings from four contests worked out at £365 a second. Mathematicians can get busy and find out what his annual rate of pay would amount to at this rate.

Joe's life story is certainly one of the greatest of romantic "Rags" to Riches" stories. Born amid poverty and squalor in a crowded ramshackle cabin in an Alabama cotton field, Louis is probably the greatest money winner in the history of boxing.

Up to the time of beating Burman he had had 48 fights as a professional, winning 40 of them by knockouts or technical knockouts and seven on points. The only blot on his copy-book was his twelfth round knockout at the hands of Max Schmeling—before he won the championship. That defeat was amply avenged later, however, when Louis put the German away in the first round.

"Red" Burman, a protege of Jack Dempsey, for whom he used to act as chauffeur, greatly impressed the critics by his courageous effort to dethrone Louis.

Uneasy in Third

There was a period in the third round when the champion was definitely uncomfortable. He slipped to the ground when Burman landed a hard right-cross to the jaw. It was probably surprise rather than the weight of the blow that caused Louis to fall, for he jumped up immediately before a count could be started. If it was the punch that put him down this would seem to lend weight to Jack Dempsey's alleged remark that Louis "could'nt take it about the head."

Burman, conceding a stone in weight, put up one of the best fights seen against Louis for a long time. He repeatedly waded into the champion with a heavy, if at times rather wild, two-fisted attack which he interspersed with effective leads to the head, and he occasionally made the champion look far from being the greatest fighter of his day.

Only eleven seconds remained of the fifth round when Louis unleashed the finishing blow, a paralyzing left hook to the stomach. Burman was counted out as he hung over the ropes, gripping his agonized body.

Indian Dies at Age 140 In Assam, Mourned By Widow, 125, Still Spry

Reuters

CALCUTTA, April 16.—Assam's oldest resident, Sar Rongfa, has just died at the age of 140, leaving behind a 125-year-old widow. Sar Rongfa, who belonged to a tribe in the interior of the Golaghat subdivision in Assam, held the post of a village headman, and until the time of his death had carried out his duties without any difficulty. He still had a strong set of teeth when he died. Sir Rongfa's wife says that she feels as strong as any of her grandchildren.

FALL OF SUEZ CANAL FEARED BY BRITAIN

Fleet Would Be Deprived of Haven of Refuge in Eastern Mediterranean Sea

D.N.B.

MADRID, April 18.—If the Suez Canal should fall, then the British fleet would be deprived not only of a haven of refuge in the Eastern Mediterranean but its position in this part of the Mediterranean would be altogether seriously menaced according to the opinion of the Mr. Calvo, the London Correspondent of the Spanish paper ABC.

He adds that it was no longer a secret that an honorable defeat in Greece would leave only scars, but under no circumstances could Great Britain allow herself the luxury of losing the African battle. Mr. Calvo then cites an article in the Daily Mail as follows:

"This big battle which really will have historic consequences must be fought by Great Britain with all reserves at her disposal. Nobody expected the Germans to march on Egypt at a moment when a part of General Wavell's soldiers were engaged in Greece and others in Ethiopia. Let us make superhuman efforts and let us send sufficient reinforcements to General Sir Archibald Wavell in order to save the most important object of all: Egypt and the Central Orient!"

In view of these decisive events the air attacks on the British Isles were even losing somewhat of their importance. All thoughts and efforts centering on Egypt and the Suez Canal as well as the battle on the Balkans were much more interesting at the moment than the night raids of German bombers. In history, Calvo goes on, there had never been such a clear case of military and political catastrophe than that of the British Empire today. England failed in the Balkans and in North Africa in many respects, but particularly with regard to her new organization the nation has been so proud of in the past. The nation did not know that Germany had transported numerous troops and a large quantity of war materials across the Straits of Sicily. She knew nothing of the true state of the Greek army or of the deficient preparation of the Jugoslav troops. The movements of the enemy were so much unknown to her that she even did not know the route along which the Germans could be marching in order to be in time with her troops at the weak points of the war fronts.

BRITISH TENNIS ACE MAY JOIN PRO RANKS

Dorothy Round Little, Now in Canada, Would Like to Be In Earning Group

Reuters

LONDON, April 16.—Mrs. Leigh Little, still Miss Dorothy Round to lawn tennis fans, may join the professional ranks, news which, whatever else it does, must add interest to the game as now being played in the new world.

Mrs. Little is "over there"—in Canada—with her young son and, while there is lawn tennis among the stars in America, it is difficult to imagine that the former Wimbledon champion will not cross the border and join in. At the moment that is pure speculation but it is easy to visualize the exciting games that would come about were Mrs. Little to join up with Miss Mary Hardwick, whose professional tussles of late have been frequent, and Miss Alice Marble, the American winner of titles at Wimbledon, before she crossed the line into professionalism.

Mrs. Little said that there was "quite a possibility" of her turning professional in the summer and followed with the thought that, within the next few months, she hoped to arrange for coaching in either Montreal or Toronto.

At the time of being interviewed, she admitted that plans were "vague" because she had not settled on any particular club. "My idea would be to give lessons three times a week, and that would make me a professional. One has to earn as much money as one can to support a person; then there are war charities and that sort of thing."

Mrs. Little is in Canada for the duration of the war and one can easily imagine that the desire to get back into big tennis is pulling hard. She participation in tournaments in the Dominion has brought more than one success, particularly in the Eastern Canada championships.

Mrs. Little had a lengthy reign at the top of the tennis tree but since her marriage has dropped from the picture. But not so far that she would not be an immediate success in a "come back," and the professional idea, remembering the interest which is being taken in the series of games between Miss Marble and Miss Hardwick, despite the many set-backs sustained by the English girl appears to be a good one. One can almost see the headlines—Dorothy Round to meet Miss Alice Marble; Wimbledon champions meet—but that is looking into the future.

It is a long while since women's tennis had a professional of outstanding merit. The late Miss Lenglen, who went over to the paid ranks after being in a class of her own for so long, was the last. Now there appears likely to be a struggle for supremacy among several.

Prior to the war, efforts were made to put professional tennis over in a big way but they were not too successful. Who knows? activities in this connection, though taking place in a country thousands of miles from Britain's shores, may have repercussions which will see a tennis open championship, with amateurs and professional combined, holding the same place in sport as does the golf "open."

There is always the danger of a sport losing its grip on the public if the same people are always engaged, as they were when the so termed "circuses" of professional tennis began. But the efforts of the ladies are helping to change this by bringing new faces into the fray.

HOSEI, MEIJI TEAMS TAKE BALL GAMES

Yamagata Scores Three-Base Smash for 1-0 Victory Over Waseda Nine

A timely three-base smash by Yamagata, plus effective pitching of Uki, pointed the Hosei nine to a 1-0 victory over Waseda yesterday, while Meiji defeated Imperial, 4-1, in a pair of Big Six league game played at the Meiji Shrine stadium.

With a team-mate aboard, third baseman Yamagata exploded his triple, which almost reached the left-center bleachers, in the fifth inning. This shot combined with Yuki's masterful pitching was too much for the pre-season favorites and the first "surprise" of the Big Six spring series occurred.

For Pitcher Ishiguro, Waseda's ace flinger, this was a tough one to lose as an error paved the way for Hosei's lone score. After two down Karasumaru lifted a floater to left-center. Both Matsui and Nishiura raced for the ball with Nishiura getting his glove to it first but dropping it as Matsui brushed past him. Nishiura was charged with an error on a play that would have retired the side. Then came Yamagata's smash and the ball game was settled.

Yuki In Good Form

Yuki, Hosei's southpaw was in beautiful form as he limited the "opponents to six hits. Only in the sixth inning was he really in trouble and then pitched his way out superbly. Tsujii opened this inning for Waseda by doubling to deep right-center. Ono's single chased Tsujii to third and with no outs Waseda appeared ready to score. But Yuki applied the pressure and the next two batters lifted high infield flies that Yamagata gathered in both times, while Nakajima tapped weakly to short to retire the side and Waseda's one threat was finished.

In the third, Hosei likewise left stranded two mates. After two away, Karasumaru and Yamagata singled successively. However, Nagasaki could only lift a lazy fly to Matsui to retire the side.

In the night-cap, Meiji found little trouble downing hapless Imperial. Touching pitcher Sato steadily from the start Meiji tallied once in the second inning and put the game away in the fifth by denting the rubber thrice. Imperial averted a shut-out by coming up with a marker in the seventh.

La Traviata Opera Is Highly Pleasing

doubtedly Miss Takita as Violetta was the outstanding singer. She has a voice of lovely mellow tone, very musical, and the kind of voice that fits well into the coloratura demands of the part. Not only that, but she expressed the emotional contents of her part and being gowned in the 18th century costume she made an attractive picture and looked the part. Her scenes and singing with Alfred and his father, and again in the dying farewell were well done. Outstanding was her rendition of the very difficult aria, Ah, fors' e lui.

Mr. Fujiwara gave the best exhibition of his singing that it has been the writer's privilege to hear this well-known and experienced artist do for many seasons. His soliloquy and Die mici bollenti spiriti in Act 2 were given with feeling and understanding. In other numbers he was occasionally faulty in pitch.

Uchida Performs Well

Mr. Uchida as the father was at all times pleasing and did unusually good work in his Di Provenza il mar aria, wherein he pleads with his son to return home. Mr. Okazaki, as Gastone, impressed with his assurance but has a slight tendency to tremolo. Mr. Hibino as Baron Douphol displayed a baritone voice of much power and musical quality. The other soloists pleased in their small parts, particularly Miss Komori in the third act, but Miss Takihara's soprano voice is rather thin and has not sufficient power as heard yesterday afternoon. The chorus most of the time sang well but there were a few ragged entries.

In the Prelude to Act 1 in the very feathery and pianissimo introduction the first violins certainly were not in tune, and there was rhythmic divergence between the first and second string sections. With the entry of the lovely theme song the violins did very good playing but the pom-pom accompaniment by the brasses was rather hard on the ears. The cello section was extremely good in its lead on the song-theme but here the first violins lost the rhythm in the light accompaniment. The flutist deserves praise for his good playing. After this initial display of nervousness the orchestra pulled itself together and the rendition was good. The conductor gave the soloists leeway and followed them extremely well, giving good support always and catching every entry on perfect time.

Recently Tokyo had a concert performance of Carmen, now La Traviata, and in view of the difficulties here in regard to staging and costuming operas, music-lovers hope that more operas may be heard in this manner.

Fast Action in Waseda-Hosei Game

A bit of real action was seen in yesterday's inter-collegiate baseball games when Pitcher Ishiguro of Waseda made a hurried retreat to first as Hosei's first baseman came down with a high throw from his catcher. This fast work took place in the fifth inning of the Waseda-Hosei game at the Meiji Shrine stadium.

ANTHONY EDEN SEEKS FRIENDSHIP OF SOVIETS

Foreign Secretary Calls on Ambassador Ivan Maisky Upon Return to London

Domei

LONDON, April 16.—Major R. Anthony Eden, Foreign Secretary, who returned early this month from the Middle East, this afternoon conferred with Mr. Ivan Maisky, Soviet Ambassador, reportedly expressing at the conference Britain's desire for improved relations with the Soviet Union.

The conversations held at Foreign Secretary Eden's invitation, officially were described as being of a general nature during which a complete interchange of views took place.

Mr. Maisky during the conversations is alleged to have listed the following conditions whereby an improvement might be possible:

1. Clarification of Britain's attitude regarding the Soviet absorption of the Baltic States of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia.

2. Disposition of the Soviet claims for ships of the three Baltic nations seized in British ports.

The Foreign Secretary reportedly has been planning a move to restore British-Soviet friendship since his return from Cairo last Thursday.

CHUNGKING EXPANDS INTERIOR INDUSTRY

26 Factories Are Government Managed; 300 Plants Moved From Coast to Interior

Chungking has been concentrating on development of various industries in the interior parts of China, including Szechwan, Yunnan, Kweichow and other provinces, involved in what it calls "Free China," since the blockading of China's whole coasts by the Japanese army and navy. Its efforts are directed toward maintaining the power of its further resistance against Japan, but are confronted with difficulties in smooth execution of its plan resulting from a mounting shortage of capital, materials and labor, according to Domei. A periodical issued recently by the Central Bank of China under control of the Chungking regime reveals the present condition of industrial construction in China's interior. The news agency summarizes the situation as follows:

Economic construction in China's interior regions is chiefly under the direction of the Economic Department of the Chiang Kai-shek regime and efforts have been made during the past three years to strengthen nationally-managed enterprises, protecting and encouraging private factories and mineral mines, developing and promoting agrarian economy and pushing controlled economy.

The center of the efforts is pivoted on industry and figures show that 26 Government-managed factories in China's interior during 1940 gained favorable results. In the field of private enterprises, the Government has made efforts to develop business by removing factories in China's coastal regions to the interior. The Economic Department since the outbreak of the China affair in 1937 to the end of 1938 succeeded in removing about 300 factories from the coastal provinces to the interior, of which 234 started operation by the end of October, 1939, in unoccupied China.

Coal Output Increased

The amount of coal output in Szechuen Province of one million tons in 1938 was increased to 1,600,000 tons in 1940 while that of iron in the same province was increased from 22,000 tons to 40,000 tons annually. New furnaces have been installed under financial aid from the Economic Department in iron factories and it is estimated that an increase of over 30,000 tons will be realized by 1941 in the production of iron.

The same thing can be said about steel works which have installed furnaces. The monthly production of steel is estimated at 2,000 tons. With financial assistance from the Economic Department the manufacture of munitions including hand-grenades, shells, bombs, machine-guns, gas masks, wireless sending, and receiving sets, and dry cells is pushed ahead while a fairly large number of machine tools is also produced.

Nearly all spinning mills in China's coastal region have been moved to Szechuen Province and under the direction of the Economic Department are operating and at present 2,200 bales of cotton yarn are produced monthly by these factories. Meanwhile, the number of spindles is being steadily increased. Factories in the western section of Hunan Province, Shensi and Szechuen Provinces are starting operation one after another. The Economic Department has also under contemplation plans to develop local economy and the production of export goods including foodstuffs is being encouraged in these areas. Farmers in Szechuan and Yunnan Provinces are encouraged to develop cotton plantations. Tung-oil and raw silk form China's staple export articles and plans are being developed to improve the quality of tung-oil. Szechuan Province was the first province which succeeded in increasing the output of raw silk, followed in order by Yunnan Province.

Funds Advanced Farmers

Funds are being advanced by the Economic Department to farmers in unoccupied China to encourage farming. In this direction, the Economic Department established 107 local banking institutions besides the four Government-operated banks by the end of October, 1939. Classified according to districts, Szechuen Province has now 28 banks, Kwangsi 20, Hunan 11, Hupeh 10, Shensi 3, Hsikang 5 and nine others are in the area of hostilities.

Efforts are also being made by the Chungking regime to develop hitherto untopped natural resources including zinc, tungsten, antimony, iron and gold. As a result of these efforts, the total amount of production of these minerals during 1940 showed a 30 per cent increase from that of the preceding year of 1939. Mineral experts said in this connection that remarkable strides have been achieved in the production of steel and in the first half of 1941 nearly four-fifths of steel factories in unoccupied China were engaged in business.

The Chungking regime is of the opinion that it can by the end of 1941 effect autarchy of iron and steel if the present condition continues. Iron and steel supplies which came from abroad will thus be produced in China's interior, regime spokesmen say.

An informal meeting of over thirty experts was held increase iron and steel production were discussed at length.

The invention of small furnaces by the Jenho Corporation in Chungking recently has considerably accelerated the production of iron and steel. Concrete plans are now reportedly worked out by the same corporation to install such furnaces in all iron and steel works in unoccupied China.

Meanwhile, the Chungking regime has started a large-scale development of oil-fields in Kansu Province which were recently discovered. The Kansu Petroleum Company capitalized at 70,000,000 Chinese yuan is to be established soon in this direction. Thorough-going methods are being contemplated to develop oil-fields in the unoccupied areas and orders have been placed for the shipment of drilling machines from abroad. It is expected that work on the development of such oil-fields will be started within three months.

Reports on hand said that three large oil-fields in Kansu Province are now being developed by the Economic Department. Others are expected to be developed in other parts of unoccupied China. The quality of oil produced in Kansu Province is said to be better than that of oil produced in Soviet Russia.

Foreign Reaction To The Japanese-Soviet Pact

Despite the fact that the signing of the Neutrality Pact between Russia and Japan took place just at the moment when the Axis Powers had stunned the world by their remarkable and successful joint offensives in the Balkans and in North Africa, the foreign press was able to devote a considerable amount of space and thought to commenting on it and its possible implications.

Excitement in the foreign press began even before Mr. Matsuoka had arrived at Moscow for his fateful meeting with Mr. Josef Stalin. For just at that moment, the anti-Axis countries had put on their rose-colored spectacles to look at Russia's reactions to the Axis moves in the Balkans and had reached the to them agreeable conclusion that a real rift could be discerned in the relations between Russia and Germany. Accordingly, when it was made known that the Japanese Foreign Minister was making a stay of several days in Moscow, on one of which he was to have lunch with the United States Ambassador there, the anti-Axis papers throughout the world began to throw out hints that, if anything happened as a result of Mr. Matsuoka's visit to Moscow, it would be something that the anti-Axis Powers would have reason to rejoice over.

It was then that the official spokesman of Wilhelmstrasse put the visit in its proper light by calling attention to the fact that there were many matters of special concern to Japan and Russia alone and that that was reason enough for Mr. Matsuoka's second visit to Moscow. Incidentally, Mr. Matsuoka had also paid a second visit to Berlin.

After the pact was signed it was again Berlin that showed most understanding of its real purport. For the German official spokesman cordially welcomed the pact as a proof of improved relations between two countries which had especial reasons to be on good terms with each other, and at the same time he strongly deprecated any suggestion that this was to be taken as part of an anti-American front.

The press in England and America refused for the most part to see the pact in its true light. The London Daily Express formed an exception, for it insisted that the pact was simply a matter between Japan and Russia and should not be interpreted either as favorable or unfavorable to Great Britain. But other papers in England, although they could not readily give up the rosy hopes they had been hugging of a possible break between Russia and Germany, declared that the pact was intended to make it easier for Japan to enter the war against Britain and America.

In America it was the Isolationist group in particular which regarded the pact as a definite threat to America. Senator Gerald Nye, for instance, stating in his usual pungent way that "the pact means only one thing—it puts Uncle Sam out on the limb." In a more measured way, the New York Times, which is by no means favorable to Senator Nye as a rule, says much the same thing. The pact, it says, may force Britain to maintain its greatest possible strength at Singapore, conversely weakening its position in Europe, while it creates a problem for the United States regarding how much of its naval might must be kept in the Atlantic and Pacific.

There is no doubt that the conclusion of this pact has been a great disappointment to the anti-Axis Powers, whose main desire is to see the present war spread as far as possible, above all so as to include Russia against Germany. Such a desire however Japan has every right to disappoint, and in this respect the comments of the official spokesman at Rome well hits the nail on the head, who is reported to have said that:

"The Neutrality Pact between Japan and the Soviet Union represents . . . to Britain's and the United States' hopes that Moscow might intervene in a world conflict on the side of the Democracies."

To that extent certainly the new pact is one that cannot be expected to please the anti-Axis countries. They are wanting an extension of the war, but the one outstanding characteristic of the new pact, as its very name, its terms and the official statements with which its publication was accompanied make clear, is that it is an attempt at stabilizing the situation in East Asia. It puts an end to all the uncertainty and friction which have far too long characterized Japan-Soviet relations, and, most especially, it ends all controversy between the two countries in their two main spheres of interest in the Far East, namely, Outer Mongolia and Manchoukuo.

Any pact that contributes even one iota of peace in any part of the world ought to be welcomed on all sides, except, of course, among those who do not want peace. It may be—but we say this with the utmost caution, for there is nothing specific in the pact on this point—that the pact will work disadvantageously in one quarter, and that is Chungking. At least, so Chungking itself says. Thus, according to an Associated Press report from Chungking,

"Chinese Communists in Chungking have been stunned by the Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact, as they have been insisting in the past that such an agreement was impossible." While Dr. Hu Shih, the Chungking Ambassador at Washington is reported to have admitted that the Soviet-Japanese Pact was "a grave disappointment to the Chiang Kai-shek regime."

If the way that both the Chiang Kai-shek regime and the Chungking Communists choose to interpret the pact should prove to be the right one, then surely the pact is all the better for that. For it should mean a hastening of the coming of peace in China.

This new pact ought neither to be overestimated nor underestimated, and certainly it ought not to be distorted and misinterpreted. Taking it at its face value it can mean only one thing, a marked improvement of relations between Japan and Soviet Russia, which on more than one occasion in recent years have been strained to a very dangerous degree. On this ground, at any rate, both Japan and Russia are to be congratulated, and the pact ought to be generally welcomed everywhere.

As to the probable effects of the pact on the course of the European war, that all belongs to the sphere of speculation. In itself the pact has no connection with the European war. As the Wilhelmstrasse spokesman said, "It is a matter simply between Japan and Russia." Japan has frequently reiterated that she desires to keep out of the European conflict and that her signature to the Tripartite Pact was given for the sake of stabilizing the situation in the Pacific. About her future actions in regard to the present war, Japan must be left free to decide according to circumstances. Her wish is to remain out of the conflict. Many other nations, however, have wished to remain out of it and the movement of events has brought them in. Japan devoutly hopes that no movement of events will bring her in. But, at any rate, she claims the right to wait until the events actually occur before deciding.

Up to the present Japan believes she has consistently acted in the interests of peace, and points to the new Japan-Soviet Neutrality Pact as a further proof thereof.

'Defense' Elastic Term

When you read that "banks are urged to aid defense housing" you may be impressed that a tendency to tag everything as a national defense measure is likely to become a bit ridiculous. Just as in the other war everything under the sun was acclaimed first aid to American victory: "Spinach will win the war." "Prunes will win the war—eat more of them." Such slogans got to be full of prunes before the armistice put them out of business. So it may be with free breakfasts in the kindergarten "for defense." So far as housing is concerned, the national defense undoubtedly does demand that suitable living quarters for workers be provided as rapidly as possible in communities whose industrial life has been quickened by a lot of war orders—Lowell Courier-Citizen.

PANAMA OFFERS SERIES OF AIR BASES TO U.S.

Pact Now Strengthening Weakest Link in Canal Defense

By J. FRED ESSARY

Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON.—The Panama Government, through a manifesto of President Arnulfo Arias, granted the United States a series of sites for air and anti-aircraft bases for further protection of the Panama Canal, it was made known early in March.

Negotiations for these sites have been under way for months between officials of the War Department and President Arias.

By today's agreement (March 5, 1941) the United States is now enabled to strengthen the weakest link in the defense system of the canal, and proceed with the job without delay. It is indicated that the money for this project already is available.

Misgivings Unfounded

For some time this Government has had misgivings as to the friendliness of President Arias. He had been accused locally of decided totalitarian leanings, amounting in a sense to unfriendliness toward the United States.

The Panama Executive went far to dissipate that idea when he proclaimed in a formal manifesto solidarity of his nation with the United States in all matters looking to the defenses of the Panama Canal and to the use of Panama territory to that end.

The agreement between the two Governments, it is reported here, allows the United States air-base sites, searchlight and detector sites wherever needed in Panama territory beyond the boundaries of the ten-mile Canal Zone area.

The importance of these sites from a military standpoint was emphasized by War Department officials recently. The new air and anti-aircraft fields may be located far enough from the canal to enable successful defensive operations, particularly by interceptors that attack hostile bombers before the latter can get in their work.

Such defensive works are vitally necessary to adequate protection of the canal, officials here admit, and do, in fact, as already pointed out, remedy a weakness in the army's defenses, long recognized and deplored.

Agreement Reached Under Treaty

The agreement with Panama, which has been under negotiation and is now tentatively concluded, has been reached under Article 10 of the treaty with the United States signed in 1939. This article provides:

"In case of an international conflagration or the existence of any threat of aggression, which would endanger the security of Panama, or the neutrality and security of the Panama Canal, Panama and the United States may take such measures for prevention or defense as may be considered necessary for the protection of common interests. Any measures taken will be subject to consultation between the two Governments."

Officials here say that specific sites for the new bases cannot be revealed at this time. Many details of the arrangement have yet to be concluded.

In his announcement President Arias said that such land as may be ceded to the United States will be returned to Panama after the emergency has passed.

He said also that "adequate compensation" for the sites would be paid by this country.

All expenses in utilizing the sites, in arming them and in equipping them will be borne by the United States. The military workers will be under control of the United States Army, but jurisdiction over the civilians in the area will be exercised by the Government of Panama.

Zone Not to Be Enlarged

In other words, there is to be no permanent enlargement of the Canal Zone: only its purely defensive works.

The Panama Embassy in Washington said that the Ambassador had no official confirmation that the agreement between the two Governments had been reached.

The negotiations, it was added, had commenced after the Arias inauguration last October, and were carried on both here and in Panama.

Building Up Agriculture

The war has resulted in some devastating damages to Alsatian agriculture. In order not to lose available soil and working forces, with their contributions to the food basis of Europe, the head of the German Civilian Administration in Alsace has established an extension bureau in Strassburg of the Provincial Food Department of Baden, and an additional food department under the direction of a county farming head in each of the 13 Alsatian countries. Immediate agricultural measures have also been taken. For instance, the German army contributed 13,000 captured horses for tilling the land.

In addition, up to the present, the Alsatian peasants have received 27,000 cows, 3,200 oxen and 19,000 hogs, as well as other stock and equipment. Of the approximately 317,500 acres of agricultural area laid bare, about 75,000 acres will be sown this winter already with winter rye and winter wheat. Through well organized communal work, it was possible to harvest roughly 1,500 tons of hops, 24,000 tons of sugar-beets, 6,500 tons of tobacco last fall, as well as other crops, all serving to assure supplies for the population. Endeavors are being made to bring Alsace up to the output of the neighboring province of Baden.

New Long-Distance Telephone Cable

A German electrical firm has recently delivered to the Swedish Telegraphic Service a new type of long-distance telephone cable to be operated between Malmo and Helsingborg. These cables are made without the use of the "Pupin coils," the regulating of the loudness of the tone being accomplished by amplifiers only. Two of these cables, each carrying seven quadruple sets of wires, can take care of 168 telephonic messages simultaneously.

ECONOMIC STRENGTH OF JAPAN NOW STUBBORN AND UNSHAKABLE

Country Ready to Overcome Obstacles With Spiritual Co-operation of People at Home Front

By KAY MIYAKAWA

Part IV

It is only natural that in the Far East an Oriental nation be the stabilizing power. And Japan is the only country qualified. Therefore only with Japanese victory can true peace reign in the Far East.

After three and a half years of fighting it is clear today that both parties desire peace. However the incident must go on indefinitely, thanks to the intervention and intrigues, particularly of Great Britain, the United States and Communism, until China collapses. I say until China, because Japan will not. The Western powers have always underestimated the strength of Japan. They are still doing so in spite of the fact that everything that has happened in the Far East tends to point to the undoubted greatness of Japan. Moreover so long as the people are united behind the Government, internal collapse, economically or otherwise is unlikely, especially when there is sufficient supply of foodstuffs.

Japan's Economic Strength

There are certain factors which were apparently clear four years ago but which are today uncertain. There are two things which have surprised the entire world . . . one is the strength of Japan, particularly its economic strength; the other is the strength of China. Each country grossly miscalculating each other's power. China's power, however, is easily explainable. It is dependant chiefly on two factors, namely, economic and material assistance from foreign powers and upon its enormous size and mountainous topography, whereas the economic strength of Japan is not so easy to explain. It is no doubt due to its great industries, foreign trade, etc. I shall not, however, attempt to explain the various causes, for frankly, I am not certain that I can do it satisfactorily. It is, however, immaterial. It will suffice here to mention several factors which have manifested Japan's great strength and also those which show that Japan still has further reserve.

Japan has in the recent years been experiencing a period of prosperity signalized by the enormous expansion of its foreign trade in contrast to the depressed conditions prevailing in most other countries. However large part of its trade has been with the United States, Great Britain and its Dominions and possessions. The United States occupies the first place among the countries with which Japan trades while Japan comes third in importance among the nations with which the United States carries on trade. It must be emphasized here that Japan has depended chiefly on the United States for raw cotton, wheat, iron and steel, petroleum and its products, copper, etc. and more recently almost entirely for scrap iron . . . in other words for many commodities essential for the execution of the present hostilities.

'Cash and Carry System'

With the outbreak of the hostilities there was a substantial stiffening on the part of the United States against trade with Japan. In spite of its tremendous trade expansion the balance has been unfavorable to Japan. Japan was soon faced with the "Cash and Carry System" as a result of which Japan had to buy in cash scrap iron, high grade airplane gasoline and other war materials absolutely essential to it.

Following the announcement of the United States in 1939 for the abrogation of the Treaty of 1911, "Export License System" has been gradually made applicable to more and more materials necessary for war, until by the end of 1940 the United States had some 75 or more commodities listed under the license system. The result was that it amounted to practical embargo upon all grades of iron and steel scraps, high grade gasoline, etc., which are absolutely essential to Japan. Moreover today the United States is not only studying the means of preventing the importation of all Japanese goods, but is making plans for the total prohibition of the exportation of all or any commodities that may be used in connection with the execution of the Sino-Japanese struggle.

The point to be noted here is that in spite of the facts that Japan has been buying much of its war materials in cash in the last several years and clothing and feeding its soldiers spread from the Siberian border in the north to Hainan Island and French-Indo China in the south and providing them with modern arms resulting in a great drain upon its national treasury, Japan is still prepared and capable of buying more materials in cash. These facts must be taken as a good evidence of the stability of Japan's economic strength.

The United Will

Equally important or even more so than the economic strength of a nation at war are the united will of the people to fight and carry on and sufficient supply of foodstuffs. One thing is most certain, that is in the present hostilities the whole nation is behind the Government, wherein lies the real strength of Japan. The united will of the Japanese people to carry on the war to a successful close can not be questioned. It is well established that when once forced to fight, Japanese will fight with all his strength willing to give his life whenever necessary for the national cause. The Japanese are prepared as well as capable of much more sacrifice, in fact whatever sacrifice necessary. The Japanese people, men and women of all ages, unlike any other race in the world, are all endowed with the courage or will power, often called spiritual strength, to overcome whatever material difficulties or obstacles that may confront them.

This will power is inherent in the Japanese, and it is this will power united as one that has made Japan great and that which will guide Japan to still greater heights in future. Supported solidly by the whole nation the Japanese army and navy are prepared for a show-down . . . even with any of the first ranking powers, may it be the United States, Great Britain or any others, which have been maneuvering China from behind the scenes.

Self-Sufficient of Food

Food without doubt is the most important factor in the preservation of mankind. It was the lack of food more than anything else which spelled defeat for Germany in 1918. Fortunately, however, Japan can if necessary feed its people without depending upon Westerne powers. The Japanese obtain the three essential constituents of food, namely, portein, carbohydrate and fat chiefly from cereals and potatoes, fish, beans and others, all within easy reach of Japan. Today therefore, Japan is practically self-sufficient in foodstuffs. Equipped with sufficient economic strength, foodstuffs and the united support of the people, Japan will no doubt emerge victorious in the present struggle.

In December of 1937 I had the opportunity to inspect carefully that after effects of the war in and around Shanghai. At that time I saw the thorough preparedness of the Chinese and how they had cleverly built many of their machine-gun nests and their artillery positions near or behind foreign owned factories and buildings . . . usually around those of Americans and Britishers. Whenever any damage was caused to any of these factories or buildings the Foreign Offices concerned were put into motion and the newspapers all over the world did their jobs. Is there any reason not to assume that the above facts may be good examples of similar tactics in other parts of the country.

Merely Question of Time

In spite of China itself, Communism and all the foreign powers behind it, Japan must and will prevail and with Japan peace will triumph. Japanese victory is merely a question of time, and there remains another issue of highest importance to the Western powers: whether the economic development of China after the Japanese victory will or will not be inimical to the interests of the Western powers.

SOVIET NEUTRALITY BINDS AXIS NATIONS

Japan-German-Italian Pact Will Be Strengthened by Agreement With Moscow

The Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact has been eliciting a flood of public comments in Japan, the consensus of which being that it will strengthen the Japan-German-Italian Tripartite Pact and improve the situation over the northern border of the Far East. The Diamond, economic magazine, just issued, has the following to say about the pact:

"Japan-Soviet relations are not similar to those of Germany or Italy. The Tripartite Pact may be considered as expansion of the anti-Comintern pact. There exists the Portsmouth Treaty and Peking Treaty existing between Japan and the Soviet Union in regard to the northern fishery, Karafuto oil concession and others. What will become of these treaties, when the neutrality pact is signed? Nothing has been made clear as to this point yet. Economic circles are attaching importance to effects of the pact, because, if the new pact is concluded for Japan's one-handed advantage, there must be the same advantage acquired by the Soviet Union.

"There is no denying the fact that the Soviet Union has a great concern over the Balkan situation, but it is not believed possible that country should take part in the present European War on either side, taking advantage of the conclusion of the new pact. Attention must be centered on the China affair. What will become of the Soviet aid of the Chungking regime then? Britain is anxious over the future of this Soviet aid. Some say the Soviet Union will stop aiding Chungking, taking advantage of the new pact, but others argue the aid will be kept up.

Caution Is Urged

"It may be difficult for the Soviet Union to liquidate its Chungking and Communist aiding policy all at once. It is true the neutrality pact means a great deal toward world peace, but it is premature for Japan to be elated over its possible acquisition of an advantageous position. Extreme caution should be paid to such an optimistic way of thinking. How to work the pact smoothly and effectively is left to the future."

The Nikkan Kogyo, the largest industrial daily in this country, had the following to say on the pact, according to Domei:

"Japan and the Soviets know better than anyone else that the Soviet-Japanese neutrality pact when concluded at the cost of the Tripartite Pact would prove more than worse, and that the treaty could be at its best when and only when it is brought abreast with the cause of the Tripartite Pact which seeks a new order for the sake of real world peace.

"There is no denying the fact that the improvement of the Soviet-Japanese relations strengthens Japan's position as it does the Soviet Union's. Japan's policy toward America, however, is traditionally peaceful. There is not a single instance in the 2,600-year long Japanese History which records Japan's attempt ever made to invade into America. Nor is Japan so weak footed in East Asia now as to need outsiders' help or encouragement in enforcing her own policy deemed necessary.

"Japan's attitude toward America will, as toward any other Powers, be always determined by Japan's own policy and necessity, and by no means with the aid from the outsiders.

Will Settle Problems

"The Soviet-Japanese understanding as reached now will pave the way toward the settlement of the many old problems pending before the two nations, and such solution would in turn contribute towards the restoration of world peace, through consolidation of the Tripartite Pact and through presentation of chance for reflections by all the nations loving peace. It is in this sense that the present Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact deserves the heartiest welcome and congratulations not only for the contracting Powers but for the world peoples in general."

The Keijo Nippo, Keijo, Chosen, organ of the Chosen Government-General, says as follows:

"The present conclusion of the Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact completely upsets all the schemes of such third Powers as have hitherto been taking pains to please and win the Soviets over to their own camp in an attempt to restrain the Japanese. This imparts a striking significance to the new treaty.

"But what claims still higher appreciation as the effect of the agreement is the practical contribution the pact is calculated to make toward the disposal of the China affair.

"That Chungking has hitherto been depending as much upon the Soviet aid, as upon the Anglo-American support, for maintenance of its hostile resistance against the Japanese, needs no reiteration. The Chungking authorities have heretofore been planning their anti-Japanese operations under the impression that the regulation of the Soviet-Japanese relations under the present circumstances would be out of the question.

Chungking Disappointed

"It was, in fact, only a few days after their public declaration boasting of the 'increasing' Soviet aids, that the Chungking authorities had to express their thinly veiled disappointment stating that the neutrality pact could not affect the Soviet aids much, while the Takungpao came out with an assertion that the new treaty would facilitate Japan's attack on Chungking and impair the latter's sovereignty.

"The Chinese Communists are nonetheless harder hit by the new Soviet-Japanese pact than the Chungking regime. The Communists still pretend that the new treaty between the Soviets and Japan could not affect their stand in China, but the latest New York dispatch reporting them as declaring that the Moscow policy is beyond their comprehension, bears an eloquent witness to the serious blow they received from the present neutrality pact.

"It was the Soviet Government's attitude toward Japan, that had been encouraging the Communists element in Chungking into anti-Japanese resistance. The worse the Soviet-Japanese atmosphere got, the more apparent used to become the activities of the 8th Route Army in different parts of the front. Under these circumstances, the first effect of the present agreement must be the infinite depression of the Communist army morale.

Pact's Effect on Chungking

"Another interesting aspect of the whole problem is the possible effect the pact is to produce upon the future of the Chungking internal dissension between the Kuomintang and Communist elements. The fatal breach between the two groups was barely averted through the compromise by the Kuomintang. The latter was compelled to make the compromise at the 11th hour solely because of the expected aid of the Moscow Government to the Communists. A little consideration of these circumstances would shed no small light upon the future of the internal dissension."

The true intention of Japan in concluding the Neutrality Pact is nothing but to consummate the Tripartite Pact which is dedicated to peace, and to contribute through such consummation to the real peace of mankind, says the Yomiuri. "But as viewed from the standpoint of the anti-Axis Powers, the present Pact might loom as signifying Japan's diplomatic demarche for consolidating her position on the possibility of the Pacific disturbance, and for promoting her potential influence over the South Seas.

"Whatever that may be, one thing is certain that America, Britain and Chungking have of late been keeping up a positive intercourse among themselves regarding the Pacific situation.

"If the present Neutrality Pact which is more designated for peace than for war, does not put an end to the Chungking policy of depending on America and Britain for its resistance against Japan on the Sino-Japanese front, and if the political operations in the South Pacific should continue to assume threatening dimensions, the Japanese public might begin to urge the Government to seek practical consummation of its success in the North by taking a more definite step in the South."

NEW FERRY PACT SIGNED

Germany, Denmark Hope to Start Service Before 1945

Transocean

COPENHAGEN, April 9.—Germany and Denmark have concluded an agreement for the establishment of a new ferry service between Scandinavia and the Reich, it was announced today. The ferry boats will ply between Roedby and Fehmarn.

Work for the establishment of the new service will start simultaneously in both countries, probably early this summer. In this case the new service can be expected to be in operation at the latest in 1945.

SAKAMOTO, KASE SEE LEADERS OF EUROPE

Hitler, Stalin and Mussolini Described by Two Members Of Matsuoka's Party

Impressions of Axis Europe were told the Yomiuri by Chief Tamao Sakamoto of the Asiatic and European Affairs Bureau of the Foreign Office and Secretary Toshikazu Kase, who were in Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka's entourage during his European tour, during the train journey from Manchuli to Hailar Sunday.

Mr. Sakamoto said: "I found the Italians composed and sure of their final victory despite their minor military missteps in the present war, when I visited Rome after an absence of one year. There was no indication of a material shortage.

"We were impressed deeply when we heard Kimigayo sung by Italian girls who performed a group dance for Mr. Matsuoka in Rome. We were informed of the Jugoslav coup d'etat in Berlin when we were conferring with Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop. The German Foreign Minister dismissed it as only a matter of secondary importance in a firm tone which showed confidence. As subsequent developments proved, it was only a Jugoslav internal problem which could have been solved by that nation itself.

"Chancellor Adolf Hitler, Premier Benito Mussolini and Secretary-General Joseph Stalin alike struck me as men who have attained a perfect character. They had no oppressive air which the popular mind attributes to a dictator. Seeing them all in a short period I was surprised to find common traits among them. They are natural and human, devoid of any affectation."

Secretary Kase reported his experiences as follows:

"Secretary-General Stalin was far from a character we had imagined him to be. He appeared very accessible. When I saw him toast the signing of the neutrality pact joyfully, I thought him genuinely human.

"Chancellor Hitler impressed me with his vigorous health. His gestures and words were brisk. He struck me as a born leader of men. Premier Mussolini appeared as a cheerful man who does not care about trifles. There is a paternal air about him.

"At Moscow we were invited to see Anton Chekhov's Three Sisters, which was a very good show. Romeo and Juliet was being given at Leningrad. In Russia many recitals of music and dances were being given.

"Another thing which impressed us was the great concern about juvenile scientific education.

"Audiences at Russian theaters and recitals were clad in somber clothes but those in Germany were in uniforms almost exclusively. Punctuality at German theaters was surprising. Every passer-by on a Berlin street had an air of strict Nazi discipline.

"In Italy, things were a bit different. The public welcomed us in a more informal and spontaneous way, hailing us from windows and following us in the street."

YASUKUNI CEREMONY TO BE HELD TONIGHT

Spirits of 14,976 Soldiers, Sailors to Be Deified—5-Day Festival Follows

The heart of the Japanese nation will turn once again to the Yasukuni Shrine, known to foreigners as the Military Shrine, on top of Kudan Hill tonight when the spirits of 14,976 Japanese soldiers and sailors and others, who died at the China front in performance of their duties for the country, will be deified in the presence of their close relatives with the most august and impressive Shinto ceremonies. The deification of the spirits of those who died in war is the greatest honor His Majesty the Emperor can bestow upon his subjects.

The deification ceremonies will last more than two hours. All the details of the deification ceremonies and of big affairs which will take place during the following two days will be broadcast throughout the country by JOAK.

Following the deification, the Yasukuni Shrine will hold an extraordinary grand festival for five days. On Friday morning, Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress will proceed to the shrine to worship the newly deified spirits as well as those previously enshrined. On this occasion, the 39,000 bereaved relatives of the dead will have the honor of paying their respects to their Sovereign from special points of vantage.

Admiral Kato Chairman

The chairman of the committee in charge of the festival this spring is Admiral Viscount Takayoshi Kato. The spirits of those to be deified this time are of those who sacrificed their lives at the China front up to the end of December, 1938. Of 14,976 spirits, 14,691 are of Army men and 285 of the Navy. The number of spirits consecrated up to last fall since the shrine was established in 1869 is 193,800, and the number of new spirits brings the total up to 208,776.

About 30,000 members of the bereaved families, who have been invited by the committee to attend the grand festival, are now in Tokyo from all parts of the country to witness the spirits of their dear ones become gods and they have been waiting for this memorable day. They may be the parents, grandparents, sisters, brothers, young widows and children of the dead and may claim to be such yet a while, but tomorrow the spirits of their dear ones will be in the rank of gods and objects of worship for the Japanese people in all stations of life from His Majesty the Emperor down to the lowest in the social scale.

Strangers to the capital as most of the relatives of the dead are they have been most kindly cared for since their arrival by the Army and the Navy as well as by members of the Young Men's League, the Patriotic Women's Society, the Women's National Defense League and other social organizations. The extraordinary grand festival will last until April 28, and this will be followed by three days of the ordinary spring festival, making the grounds of the shrine a scene of constant festivity for a week.

Relatives Well Cared For

The members of the bereaved families will be very well treated during their visit of one week in the capital. The invitation to attend the festival entitles two members of a bereaved family to come to Tokyo. Before leaving home, each party received return trip railway tickets as well as ¥5 in cash for petty expenses during the journey.

Upon arrival in Tokyo, they received a sufficient amount of money to pay for one week's room and board at inns in the neighborhood of the shrine. The amount they received for this last year was ¥42. They aso received ¥10 in cash in addition to a book of tram car tickets for tarnsportation expenses for visiting various places of interest in the capital during the week.

Beside this, boxes of delicious biscuits, cakes and other delicacies were given them in addition to a package of picture post cards, a picture frame, a stationery case, a photograph of the Yasukuni Sarine, and a furoshiki to wrap them all up as well as free tickets for entering the Uyeno Zoo, the National Defense Tall, the Memorial Pictorial Hall in the outer gardens of the Meiji Shrine and so forth.

Before nightfall sets in today, the visiting members of the bereaved families will arrive in front of the Yasukuni Shrine to find their respective places marked out for them. There they will be seated and wait for the hour to meet the spirits of their dear ones.

The precincts of the shrine are admirably appropriate as a setting for the function. The compound of the shrine is noted as one of the best cherry blossom resorts in the capital. The cherry blossoms are the symbol of the faithful gallant knight, who is ever ready to die for his lord and master. The cherry blossom season is just over, and the Japanese people are now about to honor the flowers of the nation who have fallen on the battlefield for their country and the Sovereign.

Rites Begin About 7 p.m.

The ceremonies will begin at about 7 p.m. in a temporary structure erected about 100 yards to the right of the main shrine. The structure houses a small shrine of unstained wooden Shinto structure with a thatched roof. In this shrine or tabernacle rests the unstained wooden ark, into which the new spirits of the dead are to be invited.

When all is ready, the Shinto music begins and several Shinto priests in their white garments bring various kinds of food on the sambo, or square unstained wooden tray with a long stem, to place them on the altar near the tabernacle as offerings to the new spirits. The scene is impressive each priest with a sambo slowly walking to the altar with steps measured to the archaic Shinto music and hands it over in turn to the chief priest who places it on the altar.

When all the offerings are placed on the altar, the mystic ceremony symbolic of inviting the spirits of the dead will be held surrounded by the dignitaries of the Army and the Navy, the Cabinet Ministers concerned and the representatives of the bereaved families, the priests removing the cover of the ark, while General Takao Suzuki, retired, the chief keeper of the Yasukuni Shrine, is reading from the scroll a message of welcome to the new spirits.

Upon the conclusion of the reading the cover of the ark is restored to its place ,symbolizing that all the august spirits are now being duly assembled Then General Suzuki, accompanied by a group of high Army and Navy officers in charge of the ceremony, proceeds to the sanctuary of the main shrine to report to the spirits previously enshrined that the new spirits are assembled and about to be installed in the innermost sanctuary to be with them.

Supreme Moment

When General Suzuki returns to the tabernacle the supreme moment arrives, now that the spirit ark is to be borne to the sanctuary of the main shrine for deification by the procession headed by the General of about 70 persons including the Shinto priests, high Army and Navy officers and the representatives of the bereaved families.

By this time, the bonfires and all the other lights in the compound of the shrine will have been put out. The military band plays the Mizuku Kabane, and the guard of soldiers and sailors stand in salute, signalizing the commencement of the procession. The austerity of the occasion will reach its climax when the procession begins to move on slowly in the darkness led by the music of the loyal song, winding through the vast congregation of bereaved relatives, sitting on mats motionlessly, almost breathlessly, to meet their departed relatives.

A Japanese writer, who witnessed the deification ceremony last spring when his elder brother who died at the China front was deified, commented on it to the following effect: "By the time the procession was about to start, all the lights and bonfires were out, leaving the spacious compound of the shrine in darkness. A profound silence fell upon the great crowd. Branches of cherry trees which spread over us looked black against the gloomy sky.

Amid Darkness

"In the midst of this darkness, I began to hear the Mizuku Kabane played by the military band and the hallowing cry of 'Awe, awe' repeated by the heralds, warning the people of the approach of the august spirits. It was at this moment that the ark containing the spirits of my brother and others passed before me in a profound silence. No sooner had I seen the white ark escorted by several Shinto priests in white and guards of honor than I recognized very distinctly the face of my brother floating in the haze before me. To his face, I bowed my head several times. It appeared and disappeared in a matter of a few seconds as the ark quickly passed before me. As I gazed upon it and saw it go into the darkness, I realized that tears were trickling down my cheeks.

"I was not the only one who was weeping. The 30,000 members of the bereaved families, sitting on the mats, were all weeping. As the ark passed by, clapping of hands in worship mingled with sounds of sobbing followed it. The white handkerchiefs with which men and women were wiping away their tears were dimly seen moving like something alive. Never before in my life have I seen a scene so profoundly awe inspiring and so full of austerity and sadness."

Call to Dear Ones

When the ark comes very near, some old people address it, calling the old names of their dear ones aloud, finding comfort and satisfaction in doing so. The ark finally reaches the santuary of the shrine and when it is rested on the pedestal, two candles will be lit. With this signal, the compound of the shrine is relighted to afford the people an opportunity to regain their former composure.

In Japan, many spirits of distinguished persons are deified. In this connection, Dr. Genchi Kato, well known scholar of comparative religion, defines in his book what is meant by the Japanese deification of the spirits of the dead. There are, according to Dr. Kato, two conceptions of god; one is absolute god and the other the divinity revealed in man. The absolute god, according to him, is the supreme ruler of mankind and it is absolutely impossible for man to attain that position, while the other conception of god is the godhood attained by man through his own efforts. The Japanese conception of god belongs to the latter category, conceiving that a person, who has attained the divine quality in his personality and character by his own efforts, is a revelation of god.

Magazine Reviews
Yosuke Matsuoka

circle does not like him because he speaks of what they do not wish to be revealed about them. He is simple and honest. He makes straight forward actions and does not use intrigue. He is instinctive rather than analyzing, and sometimes he goes beyond theories and figures. He may lack the power of observation, which defect is offset by the sure instinctiveness and strong confidence in possibility. A close friend of his said that Matsuoka would be greater if he understood figures more. This man said "I wanted Matsuoka to go to Berlin and Rome before signing the tripartite alliance. Two months before the alliance was talked about, I asked him to go to Europe and make diplomatic gestures, but he did not listen."

He has a good foresight that is so essential in politics. Regarding the abolition of political parties he showed a great foresight. When he first spoke of dissolving political parties, party men laughed at him, and said that the abolition of parties is a movement of the party for dissolving political parties. But he said that parties should be dissolved first and the rest could be done later. That is to say he meant the reorganization of national politics, or the new order of politics. Those who laughed at him have now dissolved their parties.

When the Lukouchiao incident took place, his foresight felt the need of reexamining the industrial section of the South Manchuria Railway. Immediately after the incident, he went to Director of General Affairs Yuan Hoshino of Manchoukuo and proposed that the Showa Steel Works should be turned over to Manchoukuo and the South Manchuria Railway Company to be made a national policy company to engage in the unification of transportation systems in Manchoukuo and North China. In less than six months after that most portions of the industrial section of the railway company were separated from the company to form the Manchoukuo Heavy Industry Company. But when it came to the transfer of those industries, Matsuoka was placed in a difficult position of not readily consenting to the proposal made by Hoshino, because of various circumstances. At any rate, he cast the first stone for unifying heavy industry in Manchoukuo.

Followers Are Few

He is popular, but he is not of such a nature to group around him many followers. Statesmen collected followers in the days of political parties. The late Prince Saionji was against collecting followers, and is reported to have said that such was the political life of the ignorant masses. Matsuoka has no followers because his confidence in his own strength is great and he has never thought of gathering followers around him. He wishes to advance alone, and believes that others, even unknown to him, will follow him.

Because of this characteristic, he has no brain trust around him. He may think that he does not need such brains. He is not almighty and he may need the best brains from all fields. There may be wisdom and technique to be gathered from quarters he does not know. Toshio Shiratori and Dr. Yoshiye Saito cannot be called his brains. If he had taken with him to Europe thinkers and scientists, I think his party would have become more important.

As a statesman, Matsuoka may become a premier. Yet he may not. In the present Cabinet it seems that ideologically he does not go well with Hiranuma. The influence of status quo preservers who were against the appointment of Matsuoka as the Foreign Minister is still existing, though somewhat declined. Though he has popular support, it is not likely he would soon become a Premier. Yet it is not at all unnatural for him to attain that post. Immediately before concluding the tripartite alliance, Matsuoka told me that he would go as far as possible. We must now help him, push him and co-operate with him, believing in his ardor and action based on reasoning.

AMERICANS SUGGEST LANE OF WARSHIPS

Patrol by 50 Destroyers Advised To Guard U.S. War Supplies Going to Britain

Reuters

NEW YORK, April 19.—A lane of destroyers across the Atlantic in an effort to thwart the German threat to vital war supplies from America and abandoning of the convoy system are advised by some American experts, according to reports in New York shipping circles.

American shipping experts are understood to have told the British that the convoy system would have to be revised if the steadily mounting toll of shipping losses was to be cut down.

In broad outline the new plan would call for constant patrol of some 50 destroyers along the 2,000 miles of the great circle route from Labrador to the British Isles. They would be rotated in duty so that 40 would always be on watch while 10 would either be in port refuelling or en route to their posts for a fortnight's work.

Each destroyer would patrol a 50-mile sector of the Atlantic 10 times a day establishing a lane across the Atlantic, every inch of which would be policed by a warship every two or three hours. At no time would a destroyer be more than an hour's distance from any merchantman in the lane.

Advocates of the new plan declare it would mean adequate protection since they believe that few if any German raiders would be able to penetrate a lane so constantly patrolled. In addition British merchantman would be able to sail as soon as they were loaded and could race back and forth across the Atlantic at maximum speed.

Battle of Atlantic Intensified

Reuters

A BRITISH NAVAL BASE, April 19.—As spring advances the tempo of the battle of the Atlantic is quickening. Already there is evidence that the Germans in the past few weeks have been making greater use of their navy than at any time since the war began, says Reuters special correspondent with the Home Fleet.

In addition to a large number of U-boats, they are employing merchant raiders and surface warships. Germany will doubtless make a supreme effort to stem the increased flow of war exports from America to Britain resulting from the Lease and Lend Act.

The Royal Navy, besides protecting convoys, may be expected to hit back at the raiders. Improved weather conditions will enable them to intensify air attacks on British shipping. Lengthening days and shorter nights may force the Germans to rely less on U-boats and more on surface raiders. This would be to Britain's advantage as submarines are obviously harder to track down and sink than surface vessels.

Alive to Position

But whatever the Germans do, the navy is fully alive to the position and is confident of its ability to counter Germany's sea offensive. Clearly the Nazis will make every effort to nullify or at least reduce the value of America's mounting aid to Britain, and because of its widespread responsibilities the navy has fewer ships available than could be wished for in the intensified Battle of the Atlantic, but its resources are nevertheless sufficient.

Important technical advances in various branches of warship design—most of them highly secret—are yet another factor in Britain's favor. Above all, the navy has the inestimable advantages of long training, incomparable experience and high morale.

Another reason why the Atlantic is likely to see growing naval activity is that a large number of warships is being turned out by British yards, and no doubt also in Germany and occupied countries. As these ships come into commission, chances of encounters increase.

In addition to new destroyers and cruisers, there are mighty 35,000-ton battleships of the King George V class. This ship, after which a class is named, has already proved that she is the fastest British warship as well as being very formidably armed with ten 14-inch guns, 16 5.25-inch guns and multiple pompoms, and provided with protection against under-water attacks that surpasses any previous standard.

SASAZAKI AND KAIDO TO FIGHT 10 ROUNDS

Attractive Card Is Scheduled For Friday Night at Hibiya Public Hall

Head-lined with a ten-round bout between Soldier Boy Sasazaki and Takeshi Kaido, the local weekly fight card will be presented Friday evening starting at 6 p.m. at the Hibiya Public Hall. The attractive program also includes a special match of ten rounds, featuring Toshio Fukuda, latest local sensation, against Tcshiichi Sato and five four-round preliminary bouts.

While Kaido is not given much chance of taking the nod over Sasazaki, who rightly can be termed the outstanding Nipponese feather-weight today, he should be just the fighter to bring out the best in the Soldier Boy. And with the much discussed and long-waited clash between Piston Horiguchi and Sasazaki definitely taking place in the near future, considerable interest will be focussed on the performance of Sasazaki Friday night.

The other ten-round bout also carries much interest. There is no doubt that Fukuda has caught the fancy of the boxing crowd with his aggressive business-like manner of taking after his opponent. He carries plenty of power in both fists and in his previous fights here has always come up with a great show.

The preliminary bouts will have: H. Oki vs M. Kaneko, F. Nakamura vs S. Ohkusa, K. Kikuchi vs S. Nakamura, K. Takano vs T. Tokida and K. Yamada and I. Nakayama.

GERMAN INDUSTRIALISTS GET JUGOSLAV METALS

Intense Reich Activity in Balkan States and France—Many New Contracts Concluded

D.N.B.

BERLIN, April 23.—New possibilities for the production of metal are offered to the German metal industry by the rapid liquidation of the Jugoslavian State. German mining circles view the chances for an increase of ore production in the former territories of the Jugoslav State most favorably especially as the blitzkrieg in Jugoslavia did little damage to the mining establishments.

Copper production is in the foreground of interest. Hitherto Jugoslavia produced 50,000 tons of copper annually. It is also believed that the production of chromium, zinc and lead may be increased. Of special interest would be an increase of the production of bauxite, which as the most important raw material for the production of aluminum, is indispensable in the airplane industry. Already in 1938 Germany imported from Jugoslavia 380,000 tons of bauxite. But even without such increase, it is stated in German competent quarters, Germany is already so far ahead in the production of light metals compared with Great Britain and the U.S.A. that she cannot be caught up in any case by any country.

Much attention was attracted in the week under report by the conclusion of further agreements for the consolidation of continental European economics. This refers especially to agreement with Germany. Large German orders for locomotives, gears, ball bearings, machine tools, apparatus for the chemical industry etc. have been give to the French industry in the course of the week under report. Also French optical, electrical and mechanical industries received large orders from Germany.

According to agreements reached by Germany and France on the field of insurance, the British insurance amounts will be transferred to German insurance companies working in France. It was furthermore decided to open a section in the German Technical Exposition in Paris in which new textile products from Germany will be shown. On June 1st, an exposition will be opened in the Champs Elysees showing the tasks of France in a new Europe.

With regard to agriculture, new contracts concluded between German and French farmers and the French Government respectively with reference to the extension of the area under cultivation, as well as the new grain law in Denmark, are of interest. The activity of the German commercial policy in Europe once more became evident in Milan and Helsinki. The number of German exhibitors at the Milan Fair has increased to 683, while in Helsinki a German industrial show has been opened at which 500 German firms participate.

HOUSING CORPORATION APPROVED BY MINISTRY

Organization Will Have Capital Of ¥100,000,000 to Build 300,000 Dwellings

Welfare Minister Tsuneo Kanemitsu Wednesday gave formal sanction to the plan of establishing the Housing Business Corporation with a capital of ¥100,000,000 which will build in five years 300,000 dwellings to help relieve the living space shortage.

The proposed organization will start business May 1, its main office being located in the Dojunkai building, Kasumigaseki, Tokyo. Five branches will be maintained in Tokyo, Osaka, Fukuoka, Nagoya and Sendai.

The leading staff members are:

Chairman of the board of directors: Keiichiro Soyeda, member of the House of Representatives.

Vice-Chairman: Shuzo Okada, former Governor of Tokyo Prefecture.

Directors: Shigeki Nakamura, former chief of the Mint Bureau, Shigeyoshi Fukuda, director of the Building Section of the Dojunkai, Kogoro Miyasawa, managing director of the Dojunkai, Prof. Juitsu Kitaoka, director of the Population Research Institute.

Auditors: Viscount Nobumitsu Aoki member of the House of Representatives, and Masayuki Sugimoto, auditor of the Hypothec Bank of Japan.

Of the ¥100,000,000 capital, ¥15,000,000 will be paid in within this year. The corporation will be able to float a total of ¥150,000,000 of housing bonds.

Amity Through Art

An exhibition of Rumanian works of art in pictures will be held at the Italian Culture Hall for about a month from April 28 with a view to furthering cultural relationship between Japan and Rumania. These pictures were brought to Japan by Major-General Georges Bagulesco, Rumania's new Minister to Tokyo, who is seen inspecting some of the works.

RETREAT IN DESERT BARES MISJUDGMENT

Over-Confidence and Shortage Of Troops, Equipment Proves Costly to British

By J. W. T. Mason

United Press

NEW YORK, April 19.—British evacuation of Libya shows that Great Britain lacks sufficient troops and equipment in the Middle East to go around.

Military penetration in Italian East Africa, necessity of sending concentrations to Greece and defensive requirements in East Libya compelled the British to curtail some commitments.

Necessity of using the British eastern Mediterranean Fleet to protect convoys on route to Greek ports against just such attacks as the Italian navy attempted last week, and with such tragic circumstances, loosened British naval control of the passage between Italy and Tripoli. The Germans took advantage of the opening to transport a considerable number of troops to Tripoli. That was the initial reason for the Axis push.

The advance from Tripoli to Benghazi by Axis battalions, however, would have been impossible if the British had continued to hold their advanced positions in eastern Libya in force. The distance covered by the Axis troops is 500 miles over terrain without natural bases, requiring that supplies be carried with the troops.

Mechanized units should have been able to disrupt the Axis line of communications if the necessary equipment had been available. It was removed, however, for use elsewhere and the Germans apparently knew it.

Some indication of the strength of the Axis advance may not have been realized by the British. The first public knowledge of the Italo-German movement came March 26 with the Cairo announcement that a small Axis force occupied El Agheila about 150 miles southeast of Benghazi. British sources later reported the enemy was not in force.

When the Germans and Italians pushed toward Benghazi, however, their number was increased so considerably as to compel evacuation of the city. The British communique stated that prior to retirement from the city all military stores and equipment captured from the Italians were destroyed. The implication seems to be that evacuation was so hurried that stores could not be removed.

There is room for debate as to whether it might not have been better to have concentrated more troops in Libya at the expense of holding back the British advance in Eritrea for the time being.

The stubborn Italian resistance for nearly two months at Cheren, in Eritrea, must have interfered with British plans, for it was stated over a month ago that troops had been transferred from Libya to Eritrea. Then, however, there probably was no expectation that the Germans could reach Tripoli and then cross to Benghazi as rapidly as they did.

Even had the move been anticipated it might have been argued that the Eritrea advance was more important than holding Benghazi.

Vardar River Valley In Territory of Thrace Occupied by Bulgaria

I.N.S.

SOFIA, April 21.—Bulgarian troops are now occupying Thrace between the Struma and Maritza rivers and Macedonia along the Vardar Valley, and Mr. Zagaroff, the Bulgarian Minister of Commerce, has announced that he is sending commissions to supervise the provisioning of the new territories. Mr. Vaciloff, Minister of Public Works, is sending technicians to repair the bridges, roads and railways, while Mr. Bogiloff, the Minister of Finance, has fixed the rates of levas, drachmas, and dinars which will be allowed to circulate with German marks. The Sofia Chief of Police Dragaloff has announced further arrests in the network of spies in which members of the Jugoslavian Legation at Sofia are implicated.

PORTS IN ARGENTINA SAFE

Foreign Ships Will Not Be Seized But Purchased

Domei

BUENOS AIRES, April 23.—Foreign vessels tied up in Argentine ports will not be confiscated but efforts are being made by the Government either to charter or to purchase the idle ships, Dr. Ramon S. Castillo, acting President, announced today.

Dr. Castillo also discussed the Government's position with regard to the world situation and reaffirmed the Argentine's determination to observe a policy of strict neutrality.

INDUSTRIAL YOUTHS WILL BE ORGANIZED

Corps to Be Established by Tokyo Branch of Industry Service Association

The Tokyo chapter of the Sampo or the Association for Service to the Nation through Industry will shortly form an Industrial Youth Corps within it, under direction of the Labor Bureau of the Welfare Ministry. The inauguration ceremony of the Industrial Youth Corps will be held early in June.

The object of the establishment of the Industrial Youth Corps is to train young men who will become leaders of the Sampo as well as to bring up useful industrial workers.

The Factory Bureau of the Metropolitan Police Board, and officials of the other Governmental offices and possessors of factories will meet early next month to talk over concrete matters.

The Industrial Youth Corps will be participated in by approximately 123,465 male workers and 54,796 female laborers of 655 factories in Tokyo Prefecture, which employ more than 50 workers.

The Industrial Youth Corps will be divided into two parts, of those who are under 20 years of age and those who are above that age.

A unit of the Industrial Youth Corps will be established in every factory, with one director and two vice-directors. One official undertaking practical training of the young industrial workers will be appointed to the unit.

There are 36 associations of young industrial workers at present in Tokyo Prefecture.

The authorities are of opinion to absorb those of the above associations which are considered to be contrary to the purpose of the proposed Industrial Youth Corps.

In Celebrated Kabuki Play

A scene from the Kabuki play "Yoshitsune and a Thousand Cherry Trees" produced in Tokyo last Sunday by Mr. Yui Yokoyama.

YOSHITSUNE DRAMA IS GIVEN IN TOKYO

Mrs. Yayoi Hitotsumatsu Performs Double Role as Shizuka Gozen and Tadanobu

In cherry-blossom time a Kabuki play has an apt flavor, so that the production of "Yoshitsune and a Thousand Cherry Trees" in Tokyo last Sunday, under the direction of Yui Yokoyama was both timely and compelling. Through its sympathetic scenes could be traced that deep sentimentality which is so important a part of the Japanese character. Numbers of Japanese and foreigners who followed the play and read the explanatory text of the producer were enabled to enjoy to the fullest the sympathetic roles performed by Mrs. Yayoi Hitotsumatsu, wife of Dr. Hitotsumatsu, doubling as Shizuka Gozen and Tadanobu.

It is reported that the Kabuki gem is to be produced as a screen drama and that preliminary work has begun. It will not entirely depend on a seasonable demand, however, for the essential movements of this lovely work have their appeal at any time of the year. The screen version will provide for its presentation when full stage production is difficult. That it will find favor with Japanese away from home is a point not lost upon the producer, and the completion and showing of the play are awaited with keen interest.

In a condensed explanation of "Yoshitsune," Mr. Yokoyama pointed out that it deals with the fortunes of a warrior chief named Minamoto-no-Yoshitsune who lived some 700 years ago. Yoshitsune was the younger brother of Minamoto-no-Yoritomo, founder of the feudal system in Japan, and he rendered splendid service toward completion of the work. His dominant characteristics were a frank and open character with great personal courage. Envious persons carried tales of Yoshitsune to his brother which aroused suspicion. Therefore the young warrior left Kamakura and Kyoto to avoid arousing an unworthy wrath. The refugee fled to Kyushu, hoping for asylum in the place where his brilliant deeds of arms were known. When this avenue was closed he went to the northeastern part of Japan.

The tragedy moved Yoshitsune's sweetheart, Shizuka Gozen, to follow him under the impulse of her love. She is accompanied by Sato Tadanobu, a retainer of the expatriate knight. In reality Tadanobu is a spirit fox in disguise. It wanted to be near its mother whose skin was part of the tamborine carried by Shizuka.

The main theme of the story is Shizuka's despairing love as she seeks the whereabouts of her lover, and Tadanobu's affection for his brother, Tsuginobu, along the mountain paths of Yoshino. The original and characteristic michi-yuki, or depiction of travel in Japan in those days, with effective scenes amid the spring blossoms, entrance the beholder. Originally the roles of Shizuka and Tadanobu were taken by different people, but in Sunday's production Mrs. Hitotsumatsu took both, which necessitated some re-casting, and numerous short scenes to give this gifted amateur actress an opportunity for several appearances.

Despite the difficulty of frequent changes in her parts Mrs. Hitotsumatsu gave a most sympathetic and popular characterization. The play was thoroughly enjoyed, particularly because of its associations with all the most courageous and kindly in Japanese tradition.

What of the Rialto?

By Tsunejiro Amakata

The Moulin Rouge, a group of popular actors and actresses, which has been playing at the Shinjukuza continuously in the last couple of months, will have a new bill from April 28. Ushio Sawagi (a hell of the tide) will be used as the first play. In a lighter vein, a drama called Yuyake (the evening glow) will come next. Chin-nyusha (an intruder) is the title of the third number on the program, which will be concluded by Kyoeiken (the co-prosperity sphere), a drama of 15 scenes.

The Kitano Gekijo, one of the first-class theaters in Osaka, succeeded in making a special arrangement with the orthodox group of the Shimpa theatrical school, managed by the Shochiku Company, for the performance in May, this being the first time the theater will house the Shimpa players. Kitamura, Kobori, Umejima, Ii, Hanabusa and Fujimura will head the performance while the leading actresses will be Kakuko Murata, Yukiko Tsukuba and Kobai Ichikawa. Karyo Kawamura's Ikiji (the pride) a modern melodrama, which is now billed at the local Meijiza until April 28, will be brought to the Osaka stage. Onna Keizu, another drama of high caliber, having listed as one of the Shimpa's repertoire plays, is expected to be staged.

To entertain the survived members of the families of those who were killed at the front, who are now visiting Tokyo to attend the special ceremony of the Yasukuni Shrine to enshrine the spirit of the war dead, the ceremony committee headquarters have decided to invite them to the leading playhouses in the capital during their stay here. The Kabukiza will be used on April 24, 26, 27 and 28, the Tokyo Gekijo on April 24 and 26; the Meijiza on April 24, 27 and 28; the Shimbashi Embujo on April 24 and 26; the Takarazuka Gekijo on April 24, 27 and 28; and the Yurakuza on April 24 and 26.

Tamami Gojo, popular young dancer formerly known as Tamami Hanayagi, who recently organized an independent group under her own management, will play at the Shimbashi Embujo on April 28 and 29 in celebration of her new departure in the local dancing community. The program consists of seven new dances. Ainu no Kamigami (the Gods of Ainu), a musical posture drama, is the highlight on the program. It is written by Dr. Kyosuke Kindaichi, the authority on the study of Ainu, with music by Toroku Takagi, well-known composer. The characteristic culture of the Ainu is woven in the theme of the play.

Although the hour of motion picture showing and admission to the motion picture theaters have been restricted, the distribution price of pictures has put aside the price control of the September 18, 1939, decrees, says Domei. Accordingly, in case the price is raised by the distributors, it is only the theaters that will bear a heavy burden. The Home Ministry and other government offices concerned have been urging the prevention of price increase while they have been endeavoring to avoid competition between exhibitors and distributors in fixing appropriate price in order to maintain the stability of the motion picture business. Without understanding, some distributors attempted to raise the price. The authorities' request on how to assess the appropriate price of distribution has not been responded although the request was made with a time limit. The officials from their own stand are now forced to fix the price. Without regard to Japanese, foreign or culture pictures, the proper price will be fixed on the basis of the cultural value of pictures, and the assessment will not be influenced by the industrial value.

Under-Pup, one of the new Universal pictures, has been named Aoi Seifuku and Destry Rides Again as Sajin for local release, reports the Chugai.

Jinsei wa Rokujuichi kara (Life begins at 61), one of the new comedies by the Takarazuka motion picture studios, has recently been completed.

According to word received from America, Chiyeko Takehisa, former stage actress and movie star of the Toho, who arrived in New York on April 13, is now staying in Washington where she will marry Clarke Kawakami, Domei correspondent.

TYPHOON THREATENS PUBLISHING CIRCLES

Books by Well-Known Authors Are Being Withdrawn Due to Current of Times

Indicating the approach of a violent storm to the publishing world of Japan in the immediate future, various books by famous authors are being forced out of publication in great numbers now, reports the Nichi Nichi.

The recent overflow of books and magazines of every kind and description in this country that has come riding on the high-tide of inflation is attracting the attention of the educated circles here and in oher large cities.

Greatly alarmed over this situation Kunizo Tanaka, Tokyo Imperial University librarian, and managing director of the Japan Library Association launched a movement to rationalize the publication enterprises in this country, but his effort alone can hardly stem the tide which is sweeping rapidly from one end of the country to the other at present.

Ominous Signs

Nevertheless, there are also many signs—ominous ones to the publishing interests in large cities—that the Government will take a decisive step against the publication of books and magazines at random in the immediate future, says the paper.

For instance, several books written by well-known authors, including a professor of Keio University and a former professor of Tokyo Imperial University, were placed out of publication in this city in the past few days.

One of them is Discourse on Japan's Population by Professor Takuma Terao of Keio University. Another is Education Necessary for the Development of Asia by Yasushi Sekiguchi, and still another is Appeal to the Nation by Dr. Eijiro Kawai, former professor of Tokyo Imperial University, who was ousted from the university two years ago when his books were banned by the authorities, which finally developed into a great issue.

The book by Professor Terao was published last year. The Keio Publishing Company, the publisher of that book, recently decided to withdraw the book from publication because the company fears that a few passages in the book might give the impression that the author is against the national policy of encouraging childbirth.

'Wise to Refrain'

Appeal to the Nation by Dr. Kawai was about to be put on the press, but the plan was abruptly changed by the Hyoron-sha, the publisher. The publisher explained in an elusive way that they thought it wise to refrain from publication in view of the spirit of the times.

As to the reason for stopping the publication of Education Necessary for the Development of Asia, the publisher declared that the book was liable to give an impression to general readers that the author failed to pay due consideration to the defense system of Japan now planned by the Government.

The storm is steadily approaching the publication world of this country, and when it finally strikes, says the paper, it will uproot completely the liberalistic idea of all publishers that publication of books and magazines is only for money, not for the interests for the reading stratum of society in Japan.

HILLMAN URGES ACCORD BETWEEN LABOR, CAPITAL

Era of Greater Collaboration Coming in U.S., Says O.P.M. Director

Domei

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Sidney Hillman, associate director-general of the Office of Production Management testifying before the Senate committee probing the national defense program today declared that within six weeks to six months a "no-strike, no lock-out" agreement will be effected in the United States' shipping industry, adding that "we are going into an era of even greater collaboration between labor and management."

Mr. Hillman cited the pact between labor and management in the Pacific Coast shipping industry covering basic hours and wages and assuring an adjustment of disputes without work stoppages, terming it "an accomplishment worthy of special consideration."

Mr. Hillman predicted that if the plan succeeded in the entire shipping industry it would be extended to other industries and result in fewer strikes in the future.

He emphasized that if necessary the Government should take over charge of strike-bound plants, but said he did not think such action was needed now. He urged continued governmental efforts toward co-operation between labor and management.

BIG SIX GAMES SET FOR THIS WEEKEND

Keio vs St. Paul's and Waseda Vs Imperial Play Ball Today, Tomorrow

Big Six league intercollegiate baseball game to be played this week-end are, Keio vs St. Paul's and Waseda vs Imperial in their two-game series at the Meiji Shrine stadium.

This afternoon, the twin-bill will be opened at 1 p.m. with undefeated Keio, out to score its third victory, meeting the cellar champs, St. Paul's. In the night-cap, Waseda, beaten once, clashes with the oft-defeated Imperial nine.

Sunday the same four teams will conclude their series with the first game starting at 12:30 p.m. Also on Tuesday, Tencho-setsu, St. Paul's and Meiji will have another try at the same stadium. This game is newly scheduled after the two teams were washed out by rain two weeks ago.

If Waseda expects to remain in the running for the title they must hurdle Imperial. Already defeated once, the Tomon nine is expected to start pitcher Ishiguro, their best, against Imperial. However, if Imperial performs in the same manner as they have in their last four games, Waseda should score an easy victory. But at the same time, it is recalled that last autumn Imperial pulled off the impossible by bowling over this same strong then undefeated, Waseda outfit. "Lefty" Sato who turned the trick last autumn is again expected to take the mound for Imperial today.

Mita Undefeated

The Keio-St. Paul's clash finds an undefeated Mita nine seeking it's third victory. By winning today, Keio can share league leadership with Meiji.

Other college baseball games to be played today are three tilts in the Toto league. At the Imperial University grounds at Hongo, a double-header will find Tokyo Aggies vs Kokugakuin and Nichidai vs Senshu, with the first at 1 p.m. At the Chuo College field at Kichijoji, Chou will meet the University of Commerce nine from 3 p.m.

In the professional game, double-headers will be played at the Korakuen stadium today and Sunday. At 1 p.m. this afternoon Kyojin will face Kurowashi, while the second game finds the Hanshin club of Osaka meeting the Nagoya nine. Sunday it will be Kurowashi versus Nagoya and Hanshin versus Kyojin.

FAMOUS RESORT CITY TO BE MUCH CHANGED

Karuizawa Will Take On New Appearance, Sober Attitude This Summer

Karuizawa, the famous international summer resort, will be different this year. Inasmuch as a summer resort has been wont to be associated with loose, irregular habits, tending toward decadence, and this tendency was particularly noted in Karuizawa, all will be changed this summer, said a Karuizawa resident in Tokyo yesterday.

More emphasis will be given to make Karuizawa a health resort where everybody should avail of his visit or stay in the town as a means of promoting his health. For one thing, all vacant lots in the villa sections will be turned into truck gardens, mobilizing all available forces.

The influence of the presence of what is called the well-to-do class people in the town during the summer has not been altogether salutary, stated the same resident. Individually, these villa people (Japanese) are refined, well-behaved and good spenders. But there have been deplorable exceptions and there seems to be no end to the exceptions. "Especially deplorable, I'm tempted to say disgusting," he continued, "are those men and women who go about aping the worst features in personal dress, conduct and general carriage of others.

"The sight of a young Japanese woman of wealthy class, drying glasses of whiskey and soda, smoking cigarettes and talking what sounds like English or something else in a most abandoned manner at a hotel lobby, would make onlookers think if she is unconscious of what her country is going through at present. Even if it were in peacetime, such should not be permitted; she should know better."

The Karuizawa resident also stated that besides such undesirable influences wrought on the local people by these vulgar rich, the villa life is affecting the moral or mental attitude of local young folk to a serious extent. A young girl from a nearby farm house, for instance, working at a villa of well-to-do people during the summer would think the life of her family folk decidedly unpleasant. Her brothers would have chance to eat sweetmeats that she might take home once in a while. After the summer, these children would be wanting something more tasty than what their parents could usually afford to provide.

"We need not go into the past of Karuizawa, which was first 'discovered' by a foreigner and has developed more or less as a foreign community," continued the Karuizawa resident. "With the large influx of the Japanese villa residents later, aspects in general life were bound to change, and the change has not been all to the good. Karuizawa is going to be purged of questionable features and made a clean, wholesome summer resort as it was originally intended by all, and as all are supposed to be trying to make it so.

"This year will mark the beginning of the new Karuizawa, and with such progress as the town is making in planning, the resort is expected to present an ideal appearance for all to come and enjoy the gifts of benevolent nature. Hiking courses will be improved with new ones added; facilities for transient as well as seasonal guests will be further provided to make their sojourn worthwhile. Provision for daily necessities will be amply provided, so as not to repeat the 'food crisis' of last year.

"All depends, however," the Karuizawa resident concluded, "upon what visitors to Karuizawa make of the town. We hope the summer residents this year will co-operate with the town officials and local people more than ever to realize our purpose."

THAILAND CHINESE OPPOSE CHUNGKING

Traders Are Tired of Chiang's Radio Piffle and Ask That It Be Stopped

Chinese traders in Thailand are turning pro-Japanese following the Thai-French Indo-China peace conference, said Dr. Nan Ikehara, a Japanese physician who keeps a hospital in Bangkok and who returned to Kobe Thursday noon aboard the Mitsui liner Akashisan Maru.

Interviewed by Domei Dr. Ikehara said; "The Thai nationalist movement is growing more intense. The Thai Government recently prohibited the Chinese-style dress which was popular among the girls. The Chungking radio in this connection broadcast malicious propaganda but was silenced by a retort from the Bangkok radio.

"Chinese merchants in Thailand, formerly unfavorably disposed toward the Japanese, are now distrusting the Chungking propaganda. Some of them even handed a petition to Premier Bipul Songram asking him to mediate between Japan and China.

"Thai graduates of Japanese schools are now more popular than those of European or American institutions."

The Akashisan Maru also brought 10 other passengers including Miss Hideko Futami, daughter of Jinkyo Futami, Japanese Minister in Bangkok.

SPRING ACTIVITIES BEGIN AT Y.C. & A.C.

Men's and Women's Mixed Games of Softball Will Be One Of Season's Features

After a four weeks lull following the close of the winter sports season, activities will be resumed at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club this week-end in grand style with the mixed softball league and the spring tennis tournament scheduled to get under way. An informal dinner dance on Sunday evening will top off the program.

All four mixed softball teams will get into action on Sunday afternoon, the "Cardinals" meeting the "Pirates" at 2 p.m., and the "Solons" playing the "Ancient Mariners" from 3.30 p.m.

With all the teams quite evenly balanced in strength, a hard fight for league honors is expected. The members of the winning team will be the guests of the other squads at a dinner to be held at the end of the season and this is expected to spur the players to greater efforts for the laurels.

The line-ups of the teams have been announced as follows:

"Ancient Mariners": Miss T. Planas, Miss L. Andreis, Mrs. M. L. Russell, Miss E. Tanner, C. Heseltine (captain), M. C. Cooke (coach), G. E. Beatty, H. A. Bird, J. da Costa, G. R. Fachtmann, D. Dentici, D. Harvey, P. H. Lord and H. Schoene.

"Pirates": Miss V. Albeck, Miss H. Darbier, Miss P. Rau, Miss L. Salter, F. R. Harriss (captain), E. Eastlake, F. Eastlake, W. Blamey, C. Meyers, L. Frank, G. W. Gorman, P. O'Neill and J. da Silva.

"Cardinals": Miss C. da Costa, Miss G. Andreis, Miss H. Lord, Miss J. Darbier, E. da Silva (captain), J. Dynan, R. Child, M. L. Russell, E. Dentici, A. A. F. Shearer, F. da Silva and V. Levy.

"Solons": Miss W. Dunning, Miss M. Prohaska, Miss M. Stevens, Miss E. Papendieck, F. R. Devin (captain), S. G. Bielous, R. A. Roberts, L. Dance, F. Rodriguez, W. A. Tomlinson, G. da Silva, C. T. Jones and C. da Souza.

The umpires will be G. R. Edmondson and B. G. Ryan, the former calling the balls and strikes and the latter taking charge of the bases. To make sure the girls will get a game, one of the regulations is that each team must always have at least three in their line-up playing.

The dinner dance which will follow is to start at 6.30 p.m. with the Toho Swing Band playing from then until 9.30 p.m.

YOUTH CORPS MOVE HAS WAR MINISTER'S 'YES'

Promotion of Defense Structure With Health Improvement in Youths Will Result

The War Ministry will give full support to the formation of the Youth Corps of the Sampo, or the Association of Service to the Nation Through Industry.

The preparation for the formation of the Sampo Youth Corps is being hurriedly made by the leaders of the Labor Bureau of the Welfare Ministry and the Sampo Headquarters. An outline of the system on which the corps functions wa sannounced by the Sampo Wednesday, it is recalled.

A liaison conference between the Sampo and the War Ministry was held yesterday at the Gakushi Kaikan, Kanda, to discuss matters relative to the establishment of the Youth Corps.

At the conference the leaders of the War Ministry made clear their attitude to fully support the proposed Youth Corps.

The leaders of the War Ministry said that it was a happy thing from the viewpoint of establishing a highly organized national defense structure that the Sampo aims at promoting the health of young industrial workers through Youth Corps, because young men in the cities are not so healthy as those in farming villages.

The War Ministry also approved of the system of organization of the Youth Corps. They pledged that they will give full support to the Youth Corps concerning its training on national defense and will see to the education of the leaders of the Corps.

WASEDA BATSMEN DRUB TEIDAI NINE

Keio and St. Paul's Battle Nine Innings to 4-All Tie in Opening Game

After two hours and a quarter and nine innings of good and bad baseball, Keio and St. Paul's split honors at 4-all while Waseda, unleashing a 12-hit barrage, submerged the hapless Imperial nine to the tune of 11-3 yesterday in a pair of Big Six league games played at Meiji Shrine Stadium.

In the opening game of the day between Keio and St. Paul's, the Mita nine pulled the game out of the fire by scoring a run in each of the final four innings to close a 40 gap. Aided by an error and a timely hit, St. Paul's jumped to a two-run lead in the third inning. Two more runs were scored by St. Paul's before Keio closed the lead with a tally in the sixth.

Both teams were unable to speak with their bats, with Keio being held to but four hits, while St. Paul's touched Takatsuka and Shiraki for eight.

Pecking away at the offering of Lefty Sato from the opening innings, Waseda climaxed its batting spree by scoring seven runs in the eighth to rout Imperial in the night-cap. Combined with four runs tallied in the first six innings, Waseda ran up the biggest score in the present league race.

Imperial's scoring was confined to the first inning. After Waseda jumped into a one-run lead, Imperial ran up three runs aided by a pair of hits. Another Waseda run in the next inning made it 3-2 until the fifth and sixth when Waseda again touched Sato for two tallies.

No more scoring resulted till the big seventh, when Waseda unleashed their heavy guns to chase Sato off the mound after collecting seven runs.

Tomorrow the teams will repeat, with the first game starting at 12:30 p.m.

Churchill Issuing Formal Statement

Daily Herald today declared they may not be worried but they certainly are not confident of the outcome.

New Cabinet Planned

Faced with a serious military crisis as a result of the collapse of British resistance in the Balkans, the British Government currently is discussing formation of a War Cabinet consisting of a small group of "Empire leaders" who will be vested with "unchallenged power." The Canadian Press, Dominion news agency, correspondent cabled to Ottawa today.

The Canadian news agency said that the Australians particularly were pressing for the creation of such a War Cabinet on the ground that it would serve more effectively to co-ordinate Britain's war efforts.

Meanwhile, keen interest in the subject has been aroused as a result of the question raised in the House of Commons by Edgar Granville, prominent Liberal leader, as to whether the Churchill Government has given thought to the formation of an Empire Cabinet. On the other hand, the London Daily Mail already has endorsed the Empire Cabinet scheme.

No Decision

Nine innings of fast play at Meiji Shrine Stadium Saturday afternoon left matters pretty much up in the air as to the supremacy of Keio or St. Paul's on the diamond. The score was tied 4-all when the boys laid down their bats at the end of the game.

BRITISH ARMY'S PASSAGE ACROSS IRAQ IS SWIFT

Non-Stop Rush Through Country Believed Due to Objections Against Infringement

Asahi Service

BERLIN, April 23.—The British forces that entered Iraq passed through to Palestine and Trans-Jordan, crossing the country, announced the Iraq Government today. It is not clear whether this step was previously planned by Britain in preparation against any crisis in the Near East or Egypt, or if it was taken as a measure to appease the objections of Iraq to the British advance.

In the communique the Iraq Government said that the passage of British troops through the country was recognized by the Britain-Iraq treaty, but Iraq would never permit any infringement of her sovereignty. It also said that the broadcast made by a certain country on this question was unfounded.

The Egyptian Government has prohibited the movement of ships along the coast of the Sinai peninsula in the Northern Red Sea.

Britain Accused

Domei

ROME, April 23.—The Messagerro yesterday in a front page editorial accused the British of attempting to seize all the petroleum in Iraq by landing troops at Basra. The landing was contrary to British-Iraq accords, the Messaggero said.

"Landing troops at Basra by the British is a new British aggression against a defenseless state, said the Messaggero. The London Government recalls its right to send troops to Iraq which Iraq granted, but at the same time forgets that strong contingents of British troops already are stationed at Iraq and that London has failed to recognize the new Government, which has taken over power as the result of a coup d'etat. This new British aggression principally is aimed at seizing important oil wells of Iraq."

Iron, Steel Control Coordination Group Holds First Meeting

crease the production of iron and steel substantially has hitherto made no great progress. The protraction of the China affair, spread of hostilities in Europe, and embargoes in the United States on shipments of important materials were counted by the Minister among the factors which make it absolutely necessary for iron and steel manufacturers in the country to concentrate on the exploitation of iron resources in Japan and on the continent alike. He expected that the first thing to receive the attention of the association was to ensure co-ordination of activities of exploiting iron resources, manufacturing iron and steel, and distributing products.

Mr. Ogura closed by expressing conviction that the president of the association, Mr. Hirao, ably assisted by Mr. Kihiyama, the director general, would succeed in stirring the nation's iron industry to renewed efforts to increase its output.

Suzuki Welcomes Association

President Suzuki of the Planning Board welcomed the emergency of the association as increasing the hope for an early establishment of the system of planned economy which is absolutely necessary for the completion of the program to strengthen national defense He declared himself as satisfied over the fact that leaders of iron undertakings in Manchoukuo had thought fit to participate in the national effort to increase the production of iron.

Mr. Hirao's address referred to the Government's iron policy, the aim of which he said was to make Japan and Manchoukuo self-sufficient in iron. He expressed the hope that North China would join in the iron program which as it stands covers Japan and Manchoukuo.

Discussing the organization of the association, he said that the creation of a body whose task it would be to advise the president of the association was under contemplation. He expressed the belief that the projected body would be comprised of men of ability and experience in the iron industry and officials who have experience in the administration of the iron policy.

Organization, he went on, was something. He averred that personnel was a decisive factor in the fate of an industrial undertaking. He expressed hope of seeing the Government adopt steps which might help the association in the performance of the great mission with which it is charged.

MATSUOKA DESERVES GREAT APPRECIATION

Ranks With Hitler, Mussolini And Stalin, Yukikata Writes in Kokumin

Kazuo Yukikata, noted commentator, writing in the Kokumin, says that Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka should be high in the opinion of his countrymen. The Minister's doings in Europe, according to the writer, show that he can stand comparison with such great statesmen as Chancellor Hitler, Premier Mussolini, and Dictator Stalin.

"There is every reason for believing that Foreign Minister Matsuoka was not sure of ever coming to an agreement with the Soviet Union before he called on Mr. Stalin to say good-bye on his way home from Germany," goes on Mr. Yukikata.

"Toward the end of his meeting with Mr. Stalin the opportunity suddenly opened to reach an understanding with the Soviet dictator.

"People might wonder why the Foreign Minister ever thought of going to Europe if he had no reasonable hope of coming to an understanding with the Soviet Union. Few Japanese statesmen have a greater sense of responsibility than Foreign Minister Matsuoka.

"He felt he had the duty to the country to do something by way of adjusting relations with the Soviet Union at a time when relations with the United States were rapidly deteriorating. He saw a faint hope for an agreement with the Soviet Union.

"This was enough for Mr. Matsuoka. He went off to Europe with the determination to move Heaven and Earth to right the Japan-Soviet situation. His strong sense of responsibility supplied the courage to do what he accomplished."

Italy Forms Wool Pool

Reuters

ROME, April 22.—The Ministry of Agriculture yesterday decreed that all wool products in Italy henceforth must be handed over to the Government wool pool. Italian wool producers throughout Italy also must hand over by May 15 all wool produced during 1940 which is not yet employed in personal and family uses. In this connection it was recalled that previously wool producers were allowed to keep for their personal use 2 kilograms of wool for each member of the family.

Notes and Comment

Somewhere west of Winnipeg a party of 30 German war prisoners burrowed under a concentration camp wall and escaped. Among the men who managed to get away was Lieutenant Baron Franz von Werra, German ace aviator. He, with an unstated number of other colleagues, was able to make that long prairie trip across the United States border. Thence he was assisted to escape on a steamship, most probably an American vessel, to Peru. The State Department is investigating the conditions of his flight, concentrating on the alleged abuse of neutrality by official organs. Some time last year other Germans who escaped from Eastern Canada gave out that they were in touch with a system in New York which connived at such escapes, and had built up a regular organization.

The escape of Germans from Canada must have required considerable daring and ingenuity. Prisoners wear a special uniform, have no funds, little knowledge of the country and must cross immense distances under severe conditions. Canadians themselves will pay tribute to the cleverness of the men who got away. That there was collaboration of some sort in Canada will be admitted, but in securing it the Germans again showed a special genius. Sentiment always is on the side of the prisoner, and throughout history there has been an unwritten law that if an escaped prisoner reached a neutral country he was safe and should be given asylum. This was seen during the Great War, when British soldiers who escaped from prison camps, ran immense risks, and eventually crossed the Dutch border were given considerate treatment, though interned. Certainly they were never turned back to the Germans. Now there is an order issued by Robert Jackson, United States Attorney-General, instructing border guards to turn back war prisoners who have escaped from Canadian camps, permitting them to employ "whatever force is necessary." This departure from the right of asylum will not strike British and Canadian troops as a fair proposition. There is an unwritten rule that if a man can get away from a prisoners-of-war camp, and can successfully elude pursuit and escape to a neighboring neutral State, as a sporting deal he should be allowed his freedom, or at least liberal internment.

"The United States is not thinking of escorting convoys at this time President Roosevelt declared today at his conference with the Press." So reads a Domei dispatch from Washington.

Another message says that President Roosevelt conferred with administration leaders over the latest European situation and:

"Commenting on the parleys well-informed sources expressed belief that the discussion touched mainly on the questions as to how and when the United States should convoy aid to Britain."

At the same time it was admitted in Washington that American "neutrality patrol vessels" would operate as far into the waters of the seven seas as may be necessary for the defense of the American hemisphere.

Where do we go from here? In the first statement the phrase "at this time" is illuminating. Tomorrow may be a different day and another time, perhaps the right time. In the second item "how and when" connotes a decision already tentatively agreed upon. In the third division "as far into the waters of the seven seas" takes in a great deal of water.

Four Chinese members of the Shanghai Municipal Council are to be nominated for the Provisional unelected Council which it is proposed as a permanent body until conditions permit a return to normal. The question before the big port is what kind of Chinese, partisans of Chungking or nominees of Nanking. The pro-Nanking group, as Shanghai papers say, is trying to control the whole situation, and has nominated its four. But the Chiang Kai-shek supporters have put forward their own people. As the headline succinctly puts it, "a battle looms."

Shanghai is in Nanking's territory. The presence of a Chungking group with the international body would be asking for trouble and dissension. There is some talk of having men who are for "both sides," however that state of mind could be achieved. Another plan is to have two men from each party on the Council. That, also, would ensure conflict. The solution in reason would be selection of non-political councilors, interested only in municipal affairs. Here again there is certain to be difficulty, for on them would be centered the political pressure of the party men, who have a nasty way of saying it with blows. The solution seems to be the appointment of political eunuchs, unless there is a decision to have no Chinese councilors until the conflict is finished.

Their Common Tongue

One of the British children now living in Canada heard his father on a broadcast from home and was struck by the old gentleman's odd accent. In the space of a few months, presumably, the boy's ear had been re-educated to the Western Hemisphere music of the English tongue. Similar cases are being reported all the time, most often for children, which one would expect. They are as quick in picking up the American accent as in happier days at home they picked up the lingo of the American screen. Many a year now young voices in Shakespeare's homeland have been saying "Okay, chief, let's go."

The future obviously will find the two great English-speaking nations closer together in many things, and among them naturally closer together in the way they speak English. Radio, the talking pictures and the news reels have long been working in that direction.

Not that there has been such a wide gap to close between American speech and British speech, either in vocabulary or enunciation. This department has always been skeptical on the subject of a so-called American language. The difference of a few dozen common words in a language of approximately half a million words hardly makes two different languages. More than once we have cited the fact that American audiences listening to a British King or English audiences listening to an American President have not the slightest difficulty in understanding what is said.

More serious is the distance between our Middle West's traditional twang and the celebrated lilting Oxford accent from over the sea. In their extreme form they will jar on reciprocal ears. But, as a matter of fact, the toneless American speech is far less common than the British legend would make it out to be. And even more rare in actual life would be the Oxford accent, at least in its exaggerated haw-haw version.—N.Y. Times.

Hair Growth After Death

There are two kinds of death—somatic and molecular—according to the "Journal of the American Medical Association." The former takes place with cessation of the functions of the vital organs, the heart, the lungs and the brain. Molecular death is part of the breaking down and building up of tissue cells which take place throughout life.

The definition of these two kinds of death was made as a result of a request by a California physician for verification of reports that the hair and the nails grow after death. He cited statements that hair grew to a considerable length after a body was interred in two cases. The "Journal" expresses doubt as to the accuracy of the reports, but states it is possible for a small growth to take place after somatic death due to continuation of the molecular life processes until available oxygen has been used. There is also a deceiving appearance of growth of hair on a dead person due to the shrinking of the skin, which exposes portions of the hair shaft previously concealed.—N.Y. Herald Tribune.

Long Way Around

"I say," said a bumptious individual to a man standing at the street corner, "just tell me how I can get to Blank Street."

"Well," was the reply, "take the third turning on the left, first to the right, second to the right again, fourth to left, first to right, fifth to left, cut across a square, pass through a crescent, take the second to the left, and you'll get it."

The stranger jotted down the particulars and followed the instructions given. After three-quarters of an hour he was startled to arrive at the place where he had asked the question, and to see the same man still standing at the corner.

"Why did you direct me wrongly?" he demanded, angrily.

"You asked for Blank Street, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, I directed you right. This is Blank Street."—Montreal Star.

U.S. MOVIES PLAY LEADING PART IN VISUAL EDUCATION OF ARMY

With Hollywood's Help, Special Films Are Turned Out And Results Remarkable in Training Purposes

By DON EDDY

N.Y. Herald Tribune

Our neighbor, young Tom Nelson's mother, worried a good deal when Tom was called up for his year of military training. To her, soldiering meant blistering forced marches and grueling days of drill, with boys collapsing from exhaustion. She feared Tom wasn't strong enough.

But Tom came home on furlough recently and almost immediately Mrs. Nelson, fairly beaming with relief, bustled over to see us.

"Do you know how the boys are being trained?" she demanded. "With movies!"

Educational Movies

And that is, surprisingly enough, true, as I have just learned in a survey of an extraordinary new project centered at Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, and Wright Field, Ohio, with a bustling outpost in Hollywood.

The Army, with Hollywood's help is making educational movies by the mile.

It is still so new that not all camps have had time to install their projectors. Complete theatrical equipment both picture and sound, is being issued to each division, and before the end of the year motion pictures will be an integral part of rookie schooling at every post.

This doesn't mean that Johnny-Come-Lately will receive his entire military education while sitting in a theater. But it does mean that Johnny will see what he's expected to do before he tries to do it.

I saw the new system in operation in a vast, sprawling Southern cantonment.

Recruits lined up after breakfast, fell into a ragged column and marched, not to the drill ground, but straight into a pine-board theater! There, for twenty minutes, they watched soldiers on the screen executing rudimentary maneuvers while a voice painstakingly explained every movement. Then the rookies marched out and got down to work duplicating what they had seen.

Thousand Subjects

Eventually each step in the training of a soldier, in each branch of military service, will be photographed in these little one-and two-reelers. There will be a thousand or more subjects. Men will be trained not by squads or platoons or by groups within sound of an officer's voice, but by companies and regiments—as many as a theater can accommodate.

It is army training on a mass-production basis, and it is one powerful answer to an often-heard query: How is it possible to manufacture a soldier in a single year?

Most officers won't agree with an enthusiastic young lieutenant who said he believed that "20 minutes of pictures saves a day of drill." But even old-line Army men concede that rookies learn faster when they understand precisely what is wanted. As a leathery sergeant told me, "It saves a lot of wear and tear on the vocal cords."

It does more than that.

On the screen, such personal functions as sanitation and hygiene attain vastly more importance than could be imparted by a lecturer, however able. Such routine duties as the dismantling and cleaning of ordnance become crystal-clear and vitally consequential when the screen, by magnification, is able to reveal the proper location of each spring and bolt, and to depict the disastrous and sometimes lethal results of rust.

As to maneuvers, officers have found that motion pictures not only give each man an opportunity to see and comprehend his intimate part in the whole scheme, but impart to it an inspiring grandeur, so that each soldier is eager to do his best.

Easily the most significant aspect of this new development, though, is its relation to visual education as a whole. Curiously enough, it has remained for the Army, traditionally slow to accept new ideas, to elevate the motion picture from a purely entertainment level onto the wide plane of education, where it has been trying ineffectually to climb for a quarter of a century.

Are They Helpful?

Are training movies helpful? These are facts:

A Milwaukee bookkeeper who never had held a firearm was able to take a rifle apart, reassemble it, load it and fire it at a target without supervision on his first trial.

A rookie squad at Camp Lewis, Washington, dumbfounded its sergeant by executing the entire manual of arms, then all the ordinary maneuvers, including obliques, without hesitation or error.

Of three squads of rookie cavalrymen in an Arizona camp, only one man failed to pack his complicated equipment properly after watching it done on the screen.

The day-by-day record of our new Army is crammed with similar reports. An officer at Fort Ord, California, told me he believed it was because the men learned not only how to do their jobs, but why they had to be done. The boys of '17-'18 will appreciate that.

Production of the films is the responsibility of the Army's Signal Corps, of which Major General J. O. Mauborgne is Chief Signal Officer. The Signal Corps concerns itself principally with communications, but it is also the photographic historian of the Army, and today it is utilizing the screen as both blackboard and drillmaster.

Where Hollywood Comes In

On January 1 of this year, the Signal Corps' vaults at Fort Monmouth held about 200 short training pictures on both 35-mm. and 16-mm. film. They have been produced by the Corps over a seven-year period. With Hollywood's help, there will be more than 400 by the end of this year. By the end of 1942 there will be at least 800.

Behind this upsurge is an inspiring story of Hollywood's contribution to the cause of national defense. It represents an annual donation of more than $5,000,000 worth of expert labor and equipment. It includes the services of top-flight producers, directors, writers, cameramen, actors, actresses and technicians. It is a part of the motion-picture industry's voluntary agreement to produce training films on a non-profit basis.

The story is a tacit compliment to the Army's farsightedness and begins in 1933. A quiet gentleman registered at a Hollywood hotel and was met by a committee of screen producers. The visitor was a member of the General Staff and he was there to discuss a somewhat nebulous idea for training films. Before his departure he had arranged to send at least one Signal Corps officer to Hollywood annually to study the technology of pictures, and the studios had agreed to throw open all their trade secrets.

Each year since then, Army men in mufti have worked unobtrusively in the picture plants, progressing through all departments. As they graduated, they formed the nucleus of the Corps' training-film division and began making pictures independently of the studios.

Then, last year, with the enactment of the Selective Service Act, it became apparent that production would have to be speeded up. The studios stepped into the emergency. To Secretary of War Stimson, to Chief of Staff Marshall and to Major General Mauborgne went delegations from the Association of Motion Picture Producers and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

"Send us officers as technical advisers," they proposed, "and we will make all the training pictures you want."

Money Is Obstacle

Money was an immediate stumbling block. The Army had only $200,000 for training films. As everyone knows, Hollywood's production costs are scaled along proportions that might modestly be called colossal. Two hundred thousand dollars would hardly produce even one good-sized Class B feature. Yet actually it may be enough to produce 100 or more training films, for the studios' contributions will absorb about four-fifths of a picture's normal cost. The Army pays only for ordinary labor and materials. Its release prints—about 300 from each negative—are being made in its own laboratory in Washington.

One of Hollywood's noteworthy innovations is the inclusion of a little showmanly entertainment in each film. For example, the script of a picture on hygiene called for an Army doctor to stand before the cameras and read a lecture. To Producer Darry F. Zanuck it seemed dull.

"Let's make it entertaining," he proposed. "Instead of a doctor, let a couple of rookies talk it over. They might even crack a few jokes about it."

This was a revolutionary thought for the Army men, but they agreed to try. I saw the finished picture. It is at once amusing and solid. Soldiers remember it and talk about it, thus emphasizing its lessons.

The Army has taught Hollywood some tricks, too, particularly in the matter of fast action. A picture involving infantry drill was being made one morning when the director decided he needed 100 more trained doughboys.

"We'll have to call it off for a few days," he said. Normally it would take quite a while to uniform and train 100 extras. But to the technical adviser on the set, an infantry officer, it seemed a ridiculous waste of time.

He stepped to a telephone and called Fort MacArthur, 20 miles away. Early the next morning a fleet of transport trucks rumbled onto the lot bearing 100 picked men with full equipment.

All-Out Drive

Hollywood's co-operation is not limited to the studios themselves. A few days after the producers had volunteered their assistance to the Army, the several highly unionized movie guilds met for confirming action. Each of them—directors, actors and writers—agreed to join in. Famous stars are to appear in some of the training films without pay. The Army had expected to pay minor players, but the ones called for the early pictures wouldn't take the money.

A professional stunt man was offered $50 to jump from the second floor of a burning building, portraying a soldier who didn't follow orders. (That's another of Hollywood's innovations—to inject dramatic entertainment by showing the penalties for disobedience.) The stunt man held out for $75 until he learned it was for an Army training film. Then he did it—twice—for nothing. There have been dozens of less spectacular but no less sincere evidences of patriotism.

Hollywood, as might be expected, is bewilderingly crisscrossed with committees and subcommittees on the project. They head up in the Signal Officers' Photographic Advisory Council, which consists of Lieutenant Colonel Zanuck as producer and Colonel Nathan Levinson and Major John Aalberg, sound experts. They have been newly appointed reserve officers to advise Major General Mauborgne.

Meantime Hollywood proceeds with another quasi-educational effort—the production of entertainment films aimed at arousing patriotism. The emphasis is upon stimulating national pride through such stirring features as Land of Liberty, a saga of Americanism compiled by Cecil B. DeMille from 112 different historical features, shorts and newsreels and presented by the unified industry on a nonprofit basis. Proceeds of its showings go to patriotic charities, and we shall have more films of that type.

A Puzzling Question

Whether the Army's adoption of training films will launch a national wave of visual education in our schools is a puzzling question. Many educators hope it will. Dr. Clarence A. Dykstra, on leave as president of the University of Wisconsin to act as Director of the Selective Service Administration, stated over a national radio hookup in January: "I hope it is going to be possible for the Army to teach the schools the art of visual education."

Other educators with whom I talked were equally hopeful but not too optimistic. There are two basic obstacles. The first is that educators seem unable to agree as to precisely what they want. The second is that no agency or individual appears willing to invest any considerable sum in producing educational pictures, as such, since the prospect of recouping the cost, to say nothing of realizing a profit, is extremely dubious.

Pennsylvania pioneered in the field two decades ago. The philanthropist who backed the venture is reported to have lost $3,000,000. Some time later, under the pressure of zealots who pointed out that 225,000 American schools form a vast potential market as compared to the 18,000 movie theaters, the Hollywood producers attempted to do something about it. After sifting through 12,000 films they selected 1,200 and re-edited 500; these are available to schools through Teaching Film Trustees, New York City. They may be rented for three years for $30 per reel.

Last year the American Council on Education sponsored test projects with motion pictures in schools at Santa Barbara, California, Wilmington, Delaware, and Denver, Colorado. They were considered to have proved the value of the system in the class-room. Teachers wrote enthusiastic reports.

Difficult Conditions

But the movement has gained no sweeping importance. Only eight per cent of our schools have projection machines, and more than half of those are for silent films only. Incredible as it may ssem, upward of ten per cent of the schools in many states could not use movies if they wished—they have no electricity.

In the face of such conditions the dissemination of educational films appears to be centering more and more in commercial firms with equipment to sell. To stimulate sales of projectors, they act as distributors for unusual amateur productions, even financing sound recording in some cases. Some remarkable results have been achieved.

However, it is obvious that, to date, efforts in the educational-film field have been gropings, principally unrelated and to a great extent haphazard.

Educators with whom I talked generally agree that no solution is in sight until a uniform curriculum of visual education is adopted, so that pictures may be produced to supply specific courses of study standard in all schools.

At first glance that day appears to be far distant. Yet, after watching the Army's training films in use, I wonder. The Army has taken the first great national stride toward visual education. Its implications are enormous.

PIRATES AND SOLONS WIN SOFTBALL GAMES

Opener at Yokohama Filled With Fray—Donation of Rules Book Would Be Welcome

The Pirates and the Solons won the opening day's doubleheader in the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club's mixed softball league on the club field Sunday afternoon, the former beating the Cardinals by 22 to 10, and the latter gaining a close 6 to 5 decision from the Ancient Mariners.

In the first game the Pirates scored six runs in the fifth inning and another five in the sixth to gain a 15 to 5 lead and practically clinch the game. The nightcap was a close contest and the outcome was in doubt until the final canto, the Solons breaking a five-all deadlock in the eighth inning to push over what proved to be the winning run.

The Pirates-Cardinals tussle was marked by heavy hitting and errors galore, and the crowd had many a good laugh over the miscues as well as plenty to cheer about as long hits flew toward the fence and even over it at times. The closeness of the latter fracas resulted in plenty of decisions being disputed, and the umpires probably would have called a couple of lawyers to assist them had any been available. After all the fun and excitement a dinner dance was held in the clubhouse to close the weekend activities, nearly a hundred members and friends tripping the light fantastic to the strains of the Toho Swing Band.

Pirates Score Three

The Pirates started off on the right foot in their game, scoring three runs in the first half of the initial frame and held the lead throughout. The first Cardinals pitcher walked three batsmen in a row to fill the bases with none out. With heavy hitting Harriss up to bat the Pirates supporters were mighty cheerful, but Dynan forced "Bucky" to fly out to left field. However, "Lady" Frank and Prima Rau came to the rescue with successive hits to bring in Vera Albeck, Bill Blamey and Ernest Eastlake.

The Cardinals replied in the second with a brace of runs to reduce the margin to one, Helen Darbier and Ernie da Silva scoring on a hit by Chris Fernandes and an error. The Pirates also got a run in the third and the Cardinals again cut the deficit to one in the fourth. Then came what proved to be the "fatal fifth." Two bases on balls and three hits brought in two Pirates and left the bases loaded. Then Johnny da Silva drove one of "Abie" Russell's choice offerings over the fence to clear the sacks. The Cardinals came through with two runs in their half of the inning to leave the scoreboard reading 10 to 5.

The Pirates staged another merry-go-round in the sixth, making five runs on four hits and an error. Although the Cards tried hard to bring themselves back into the picture they found their opponents' lead much too big. However, the losers had the honor of making the only double play of the game. With the bases loaded and one out "Abie" Russell took the batter's grounder, touched the plate and then threw to first to retire the side. Prima Rau's catch of Chris Fernandes' drive to deep left field was another feature of the contest.

The Ancient Marines started off poorly in their game with the Solons. After being blanked in the first half of the initial canto, the former allowed the latter three runs in their turn at bat. Beatty, portside hurler of the Ancient Mariners, lived up to the reputation that southpaw pitchers are wild by walking the first batter, Maria Prohaska. After Niles Bond had singled Reggie Roberts smacked the ball over the fence to make the count 3 to 0.

Neither side scored in the second but the Ancient Mariners staged a four-run rally in the third to gain the lead. Teresita Planas was safe on first due to a error and then Beatty hit past third to put two on the bases. Joe da Costa singled to bring in Miss Planas. Percy Lord walked and the bases were loaded. Dolly Tanner grounded out but Beatty was home on the play. Then with two away, Captain Heseltine came through with a hit to center to bring in another two runs. Roberts drove out his second homer in the Solons' half of the same frame to deadlock the count at four-all.

Lead Regained

The Ancient Mariners regained the lead in the fifth after neither side could count in the fourth. Joe da Costa worked Ray Devin for a free ticket to first, and then Percy Lord hit one over third to bring in da Costa. The seafarers retained their lead until the latter half of the sixth. Bond singled again and came home on Devin's hit to center to tie the score again, this time at five-all.

The ding-dong struggle continued without another score until the Solons came to bat in the eighth. Bond got to first on a miscue and completed the circuit on Roberts' two-bagger to the left-field fence, giving the sages a one run lead.

The Ancient Mariners came to bat in the ninth determined that the men (and women) who go down to the sea in ships would not lose the game, and they are most probably still arguing that they have not. They started auspiciously, Tessa Planas getting a walk and then "Lefty" Beatty hitting one through the infield to put two runners on the bases with none out. Herbie Schoene rolled to third to force Miss Planas on a fielder's choice. Then da Costa popped up to second and Miss Prohhaska caught it. She then threw to first to catch Schoene off the bag. The Solons claimed it was a double play and the game was over, but the Mariners said it was an infield fly and therefore only one was out and the contest was far from being finished.

Rules Book Needed

And then the fun started. The wise men retorted that that may be the case in baseball but this was softball. The umpires were not sure and so it was decided to get a softball rules book. There was no softball rules book available, so the Solons then declared that the man on first should never have left his base to back up their case. As the argument waxed hotter the debaters became thirstier and the exodus to the bar to see if there was any beer left began. That ended the ball game, but the chances are they are still debating the decision. The opinion of someone who is an authority on softball would no doubt be welcome at the club, as would anyone with a softball rules book.

Roberts was the sparkplug of the Solons' attack, driving in five of his team's six runs with his two homers and a two-bagger. Outstanding for the Ancient Mariners was Miss Teresita Planas who practically retired the Solons singlehanded in the fourth with two catches and an assist.

NORTH AFRICAN WAR BRINGS ABOUT QUERY

Major Shephard Asks Questions About Military Campaign in Daily Herald

D.N.B.

STOCKHOLM, April 28.—Information on the change of events in Northern Africa is demanded by the military correspondent of the Daily Herald, Major Shephard. He asks for an early and frank reply to a number of questions, of which the most important read.

"Why did we not proceed to Tripoli after having occupied Benghazi? If the reason for this is given in the long line of supplies making a further advance nearly impossible, why did the Germans succeed to reach the Egyptian frontier, which must have been a more difficult task for them, as they have not equal sea and airpower?

"If the Nazis solved the problem by bringing up troops by air, why did we not do the same when the Italian Airforce had been driven off the sky? It should have been even more simple for us unless this is yet another war trick, which we have not yet learned from the enemy. The Italians at any rate used it already a few years ago in their Abyssinian campaign. Couldn't we hamper these methods of bringing up reinforcements? If yes—then it certainly would have been worth while, as we thus could have checked, even wrecked the whole Axis advance toward Egypt.

"Our advance toward Benghazi was the most rapid one in the whole war, but the German counterthrust was even still faster. Are their tanks better than ours? The enemy may have learned from British tanks captured at Dunkirk. Our public wants to know whether we, on our part, have made any progress since then and whether we sent our best material to Libya. How could German soldiers be transported to Libya in such numbers? At such distance from our naval and airbases any attempt at impeding this would certainly not have been easy. But the people are asking whether the possibility of an Axis counterthrust had at all been taken into serious consideration."

England is a country that is only 50 per cent prepared for war, while the industry of the United States is only in the first stage of mobilization, says the Manchester Guardian in an article on the British war potential. According to the paper the German war production is still bigger than the British, while Germany's war expenditures were estimated in England last summer at 60,000,000,000 reichsmarks annually. On the basis of 15 reichsmarks to a pound sterling and by taking into consideration the differences in wages, transport costs, and the unequality of the available raw materials Great Britain would have to spend annually £4,000,000,000 in order to achieve what Germany has achieved.

In the period under review the British expenditures, however, according to the paper amounted to only £3,000,000,000 while later estimates in England give Germany's expenditures even at 70,000,000,000 reichsmarks annually. The paper finally comes to the conclusion that England at any rate was much behind Germany and that England was not spending as much of her national income as was the case in Germany. The United States, on the other hand, was willing to spend only one sixth of its national income.

SOVIET'S NEUTRALITY IN CHINA IS WANTED

Publicist Tamura Urges Moscow to Apply Pact to Japan's Fight With Chungking

Commenting on the recently concluded Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact, Dr Kosaku Tamura, noted diplomatic critic, says that since the pact must be a soul-to-soul tie of the two countries it is hoped the Soviet Union will cease aiding the Chungking regime and cooperate with Japan in disposing of the China problem, in his article appearing in the Chugai Shogyo.

"Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka says the Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact along with the Tripartite Alliance among Japan, Germany and Italy, and the Basic Treaty between Japan and China are the three great treaties concluded by the second Konoye Cabinet," says Dr. Tamura. "And it must be so. Especially the Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact and the Tripartite Alliance are considered epochal, indicating the turning of Japanese diplomacy.

Should Benefit Japan

"However perfect the Soviet Pact may be, it will make this country nothing but a puppet of an other country unless the pact brings about advantage to Japan, helps Japan develop, and increases Japan's security. In this sense, I want to express my private hope with regard to the Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact.

"What I hope for is nothing but that the Soviet Union will give up its aid to the Chungking regime and the Chinese Communists.

"Some one may say that the Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact was concluded so that if Japan should wage war with other countries than China the Soviet would keep neutrality regarding it, and that the pact has nothing to do with China Affair.

"Such people may also say that neutrality necessitates the assumption of a declaration of war, and that since Japan has not yet declared war against China the Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact is not applicable to the China Affair.

"However, the Pact prescribes that if one of the High Contracting Powers should become the objective of military operation on the part of a third country, the other will keep neutrality, using words with broader meaning than 'war admitted in international law.'

Good Ground for Argument

"Therefore, I believe it is not wrong that I think the Neutrality Pact between Japan and the Soviet is applicable to the China Affair, in which Japan is the objective of the military operation of China.

"The Treaty concerning the Definition of Aggression, which was concluded in 1933 under sponsorship of the Soviet, affords strong ground for argument on this point, I think. If it is so, the Soviet has had imposed the duty of keeping strict neutrality in the China Affair by conclusion of the recent Neutrality Pact.

"In other words, the Soviet has been prohibited to give aid to the Chungking government. Then it becomes necessary to decide whether such duty of neutrality and aid to Chungking are compatible.

"According to international law, however strongly the people of a neutral country aid the belligerent, it is not violation of international law unless the Government of the neutral country itself aids the belligerent.

"Although the belligerent is authorized to check such aid on the part of the people of the neutral country by actual power, there is no room to use such right against the aid to the enemy on land, in the practical sense.

"Therefore, however large the aid the people of the Soviet may render to the Chungking regime, it does not mean violation of Soviet neutrality from the point of international law, and there is no method for Japan to check such aid by its actual power.

Soviet's Responsibility

"However, in such a country as the Soviet Union, where every enterprise is under strict control of the Government, it is impossible to distinguish private acts from governmental acts with regard to such enterprise as aid to the Chungking regime.

"If it is true, as reported by newspapers, that the Chinese planes destroyed by Japanese planes were Soviet-made, it is impossible to say that the Soviet Government has nothing to do with it, though the planes might have been donated to Chungking by civilians. In other words, the Soviet cannot escape the responsibility of the treaty.

"But such discussions regarding interpretation of the Neutrality Pact are of small importance from the point of active utilization of the Pact.

"The Japanese-Soviet Neutrality Pact must be a soul-to-soul tie of the two countries.

French Example

"The Soviet Government declares that it has never aided the Chungking regime, and we hope that it is true. However, there is the instance of France, who had persistently denied aid to China until the fall of France, despite evident proof of such aid.

"The disposal of the China Affair is the center of gravity of Japanese diplomacy. And the Japanese nation believes the resistance of Chiang Kai-shek is the reflection of the aid to him from third countries. In fact, Britain and the United States increased their aid to Chiang Kai-shek in the form of aid to the Fapi, on the conclusion of the Soviet-Japanese Neutrality Pact.

"If the words of Mr. Stalin, who said that provided Japan and the Soviet cooperate they will have nothing to fear in the world are true, we heartily hope the Soviet Union will immediately withdraw from the group of nations aiding Chiang Kai-shek, and cooperate with Japan in disposing of the China problems."

YARNELL MENTIONED FOR PHILIPPINE POST

White House Preference Said Given in Case Sayre Is Called Back

United Press

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Persistent reports credited to "high administration authorities" were circulated today making Rear-Admiral Harry E. Yarnell the next High Commissionor to the Philippines if and when Francis B Sayre, present Commissioner, should be recalled to other duty here.

The report, however, did not claim that any White House decision had already been made, but merely indicated that White House preference for Admiral Yarnell, former Commander-in-Chief of the Asiatic Fleet, had been expressed.

Two other names have received powerful backing from highly placed Government officials and Congressional quarters. They are Weldon James and Oscar Chapman, both of whom are prominent in associations with Philippine affairs.

Mr. Chapman, assistant Secretary of the Interior, has been taking an increasingly prominent role in Philippine affairs in recent months and is considered to have both suitable national and political prestige and sufficient background of Philippine affairs to merit such an appointment.

In addition, he is considered a close friend of President Roosevelt who has yet to grant him recognition for political services as director of the presidential campaign in the western states.

Mr. Jones, although established at the Budget Bureau, is still consulted unofficially on Philippines affairs and also is an extremely likely candidate, having been chief aide to Paul V. McNutt when he was Commissioner to the Philippines. Mr. Jones is described by supporters as having all the necessary political contacts.

Sam Rayburn, Speaker of the House, is an intimate friend of Mr. Jones as is Harold Smith, director of the Budget Bureau, who is one of the President's closest advisers in Government affairs generally.

Friends of Mr. Jones are known to be quietly working in his behalf but practically without his knowledge. They are basing their campaign on the grounds that his experience is essential in the delicate Far Eastern situation and for developing the closest possible ties with the Philippines.

Britain in Dilemma Around Suez Canal

in the Mediterranean are now within the striking area of German and Italian bombers, the Britain fear can be imagined to be extreme.

Entirely Fortified

Then the German and Italian attack on the Eastern Mediterranean will also affect the situation in the Central Mediterranean, and Sicily and Panterelia island that is entirely fortified will reveal their military importance, making Malta worthless and cutting the Mediterranean into two. Thus the transportation of German and Italian troops to Africa will be made easy and safe.

Britain has already made the utmost efforts in defending Suez, her last defense base. The safety of this canal depends on the Eastern Mediterranean fleet under the command of Vice-Admiral Andrew Browne Cunningham and the French warships captured from France, totalling 5 or 6 capital ships, 4 airplane carriers, 19 cruisers and other light craft, aggregating some 500,000 tons. For the protection of the Suez Canal, Britain has naval bases at Alexandria, Malta, Kipros and Haifa, and also newly constructed air and submarine bases at Crete and various islands in the Aegean Sea.

The middle-east troops of Britain under the command of General Sir Archibald Wavell number 400,000 to 500,000 men, detailed at Egypt, Palestine, Trans-Jordan, and Iraq, consisting of 100,000 from England, Australia and New Zealand, 160,000 Indian troops, 50,000 Palestine troops, Egyptian native troops and South African native troops.

British air forces consisting of fifteen squadrons with 500 planes, but are said to have been reinforced to 1,300 planes since the beginning of the present war.

More Reinforcements

The above is the present British strength defending the canal. But if the canal is in actual danger, more reinforcements will probably be sent from various other British territories. For this purpose, roads have been constructed and improved in the Near East. The motor road between Cairo and Palestine, the motor road between Cairo and another port on the Red Sea, the motor road along the Nile, and the extension of the railway line to Port Sudan, were all completed by the end of 1939. The Bagdad railway is completed, connecting the Persian Gulf with the Red Sea. Malta island was very poorly fortified at the time of the Ethiopian war, and the British fleet had to run away from it. Since then the fortifications have been strengthened and are now standing the bombing by German and Italian planes. The British are boasting that they will hold the island as an important naval base to the end.

The British forces in the Near East are composed of different troops, and of them about 100,000 were sent to Greece and have just returned after being severely defeated by the German army. The land troops may not be able to hold their ground against the Germans, but British air and naval naval forces are expected to make a worthy showing, even against Germans and Italians. The coming decisive battle between Germany and Britain in the Eastern Mediterranean, North Africa and the Near East will be most interesting to watch.

BATAVIA PLANS TO ENFORCE STRICT EXCHANGE CONTROL

U.S. Dollars Needed to Purchase War Materials—Ban Will Hit Luxury Merchants

Asahi Service

BATAVIA, April 28.—The Government of the Netherlands Indies is considering the enforcement of import restrictions under exchange control, and newspapers here are reporting today that the import of luxuries will be prohibited.

This step seems to indicate that the East Indies Government is in need of a large amount of American currency for purchasing war requirements from the United States. It appears that the intention of the Government is to prohibit the import of luxuries even from the United States and British possessions. This news represents a serious blow to European and American merchants in the Netherlands Indies. They have to continue their operation by merely handling domestic products. Certain luxuries imported from Japan Japanese traders here likewise will be also will be prohibited, and some 500 placed in difficulty.

LEADERS OF ANZACS EXCHANGE GREETINGS

Inspiring Messages Sent Among Australian, New Zealand War Veterans

Reuters

LONDON, April 25.—Inspiring messages in connection with the observance of Anzac Day today have been exchanged by notable Anzac leaders of the last war.

The most outstanding of these is that sent by the much idolized leader, Field-Marshal Lord Birdwood, of the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps, who is known to all "diggers" as "Birdie." In a message to A. W. Fadden, Acting Prime Minister of Australia, he says:

"Anzac Day this year will, I know, bring with it to my old comrades some mixed feelings—feelings of intense justifiable pride at the truly magnificent work carried out with almost incredible success by our new Australian Imperial forces, and anxiety on the part of those who have near relations once more in close touch with the enemy.

"We are told that we are fighting to maintain democracy in the face of cruel and entirely unjustifiable attacks on it by the totalitarian Powers, but it goes much deeper than that.

"This takes my devoutest and sincerest wishes to all my old comrades for that complete victory which, I have not the least doubt, will be ours, even though very difficult times and steep roads may be before us, May God bless the people of Australia through everything."

Acknowledging Lord Birdwood's message, Mr. Fadden cabled: "Many thanks for your telegram which has been communicated to the President of the Returned Soldiers' League (veterans of the last war). Your old comrades will, I am sure, greatly appreciate your confidence that complete victory for the Empire's cause in the present conflict will be achieved in spite of many grave difficulties and anxieties."

Lord Birdwood also telegraphed to Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas Blamey, Commander-in-Chief of the Australian Imperial Force in the Middle East: "I am, indeed, delighted to know that our old Anzac Corps has again been formed as such. Please, give kind greetings and every possible good wish for the greatest successes to one and all in the great old corps. Whatever may be before you, you can never fail."

The Australian Prime Minister, R. G. Menzies, who is at present in London, cabled General Blamey: "On the anniversary of Anzac Day, I sent greetings to you and your gallant men. You are all magnificently carrying on the Anzac tradition of supreme courage in the face of odds, and Australia's history is enriched by your deeds. Accept for yourself congratulations on your appointment (as Second-in-Command of Empire forces in the Middle East).

"Our great confidence in you has been more than justified. We are all grateful to you."

Mr. Menzies cabled to Mr. Fadden: "Please, convey to the Australian people on this anniversary of Anzac Day that I am proud to be able as Prime Minister to share the emotions of a nation which remembers with pride not only the great service of Australians in the last war but the magnificent devotion of our men in this war. We must all try to be worthy of their sacrifice. We owe to our fighting men all our support and our undivided efforts."

General Sir Alexander John Godley, Commander-in-Chief of the New Zealand Expeditionary Force in the last war, telegraphed to General Blamey: "May victory rest with you and your gallant troops in the grim struggle which you are waging on the Anzac anniversary."

PORTUGAL REAFFIRMS COMPLETE NEUTRALITY

Portuguese Premier Assures Public in Order to Check Unrest

Domei

NEW YORK, April 27.—Dr. Antonio de Oliveira Salazar, Premier of Portugal, last Monday reaffirmed Portugal's complete neutrality in the European conflict, according to private advices reaching here yesterday.

The assurances were made to quiet public unrest caused by rumors spread by propaganda agents of belligerent Powers, it was said.

Recently, the Government decided to send artillery to strategic points in the Azores where it already has sent an expeditionary force to assure Portuguese sovereignty. Two thousand men already have left and an additional 10,000 will go to the Azores and Cape Verde from the continent. The forces are principally infantry and artillery. Officers and doctors have been asked to serve with the army in the Azores for four years.

CHIANG'S GOLD BASE STILL AT SHANGHAI

International City Remains Loan Clearance Headquarters For Chungking Faction

Shanghai still remains the main base of the Chungking Government's financial exchange with foreign Powers, it is revealed through the recent loans by England and America to Chungking says a Shanghai dispatch to the Nichi Nichi.

The new loan pact between England, America and the Chungking Government was signed on April 25 at Washington. Member of the stabilization fund management committee were announced on the occasion by Chungking which is beginning a wide-scale propaganda movement in order to rehabilitate its prestige, which has been dealt a heavy blow by the neutrality pact between Japan and the Soviet.

Following are the circumstances leading to the conclusion of the new loan pact:

America has approached a step nearer to a "political policy" loan as against its former commercial loans policy.

The pact has clarified the leading position of the democratic Powers in the Far East.

It is a political gesture against the the Japanese-Soviet Neutrality Pact, similar to the moves made immediately after the conclusion of the Tripartite Alliance and the fundamental agreement reached between Japan and the Nanking Government.

Shanghai still remains the main base for the working of the loans.

Chief interest of financial circles in Shanghai toward the concluded loan pact lies in the concrete methods of its working of the stabilization funds.

Management Committee

According to a dispatch from Chungking, the following are the members of the stabilization fund management committee:

Chen Kuang-pu, director of the export committee; Pei Tsu-i, manager of the Shanghai branch of the Central Government Bank; and Hsi Te-mou, director of the business department of the Central Bank.

The course of maintaining the fapi, the legal tender of the Chungking Government, can be perceived in the anticipated nomination of the above members of the stabilization fund management committee.

Mr. Chen is a powerful figure among the pro-American faction, who controls the export of Chungking in his hands in co-operation with Sung Tsu-wen, at present in America. Mr. Pei exercises a powerful influence at Shanghai as one of the leaders of the Sekiang plutocrats. Much expectation is being laid on Mr. Hsi's abilities as a banker.

In spite of the prevailing opinions of the withdrawal of the four associated banks of the Chungking Government from Shanghai, it can be seen that Chungking still lays importance on the international city and that a comparatively long period of preparation is necessary for the withdrawal. It is also obvious that America and England will not consent to the unconditional withdrawal of the Chungking Government's influence from Shanghai under the current conditions.

It is therefore inevitable that the economic warfare between this nation, struggling for the construction of a new order, and the democratic countries, will become more tense. The opposition between the Nanking Government and Chungking, revolving around the remaining economic influences of the Central Government, will also be strengthened in this connection.

Japanese Press Comments

secondary importance, and the same applies to the proposed Japan Foreign Trade Co-operative Council.

The greatest problem now confronting Japan's foreign trade is how to dispose of the evils of dumping for the purpose of obtaining foreign exchange. Accordingly, the focal point of a new structure in Japan's foreign trade should be elimination of this undesirable practice. In order to attain this object it will be necessary to take measures to put a stop to the free competition pursued in the past by individual exporters, otherwise any new structure in foreign trade would be meaningless. This vital point is entirely disregarded by the proposed organization.

Of course, reorganization of the foreign trade structure is fraught with many difficulties, for such reorganization will require control of prices and elimination of the inconsistency of leaving the foreign trade in the hands of individuals. Accordingly, unless the exporters and importers are fully determined to overcome such difficulties, no good purpose will be served by effecting new structures, however good they may be.

At a recent meeting attended by the Shochiku officials and leading critics to discuss the merit of filming the Kabuki, the majority of those who were present are said to have opposed the plan in view of the past failures experienced in turning out the genuine kabuki pictures.

A new program will open the Yurakuza Friday when the Shinkokugeki dramatic troupe will occupy the stage. Headed by Ryutaro Tatsumi and Shogo Shimada as usual, the performance includes two new plays and one revival, namely Tanpatsuki (a short hair-clipper) by Hiroshi Muneda; Togo Heihachiro (the hero of the Battle of the Japan Sea), by Jiro Sekiguchi and Mabuta no Haha (a drama of everyday life in the latter part of the Tokugawa period) by Shin Hasegawa.

Takiko Mizunoe, No. 1 revue performer, who has been making an extended tour of Taiwan and Chosen with a group of popular dancers formerly connected with the Shochiku revue troupe, and who concluded the performance in Chosen recently, will proceed to Manchoukuo in May where she will play in the various leading cities until the latter part of May before returning to Japan. Athough no definite plans are available upon her return here, an advanced report says that the Shochiku intends to make arrangements with Mizunoe for a large-scale performance, now contemplated to be given in the fall at the Shimbashi Embujo.

Shizuko Kasagi, popular dancer and jazz singer, will make her special appearance at the Shochiku Eiga Gekijo in Shibuya from May 1 to 7 for a stage attraction on the regular weekly motion picture program. She also will play at the Musashinokan in Shinjuku district from May 8 to 14.

INDUSTRY WARRIORS TO BE GIVEN AWARDS

Workers in Munitions Industry Will Be Presented With Tokens by Government

Awarding of decorations to workmen in munitions factories, otherwise known as industrial warriors, was suggested by Welfare Vice-Minister Masasuke Kodama to the vice-ministers' conference on Monday. The reason, the Yomiuri reports, is that their services to the State especially at this important moment are never inferior to those of warriors and civil officials. The Kodama suggestion was enthusiastically supported by all other vice-ministers, Chief Secretary of the Cabinet Kenji Tomita has decided to take up the matter with the Board of Decorations for realization.

It was decided at that conference that superior mine workers would be given honors by the Government in one form or another in connection with successful results of coal production increase movement late in May. Renewed efforts also will be made by the Government to encourage production increase of gold, iron, copper, nickel and manganese ore and this movement will be started from May. Regarding the suggestion of decorating these factory workers, Welfare Vice-Minister Kodama told the Yomiuri as follows:

"I have been thinking since a long time ago that efforts of private engineers and experienced industrial warriors, who are devoting themselves to the State, must be rewarded by the Government. The suggestion made by me is connected with this. Their hard labor must be valuated in the same way as soldiers at the front. I know that the Board of Decorations is studying how to reward them. Some say a sort of industrial decoration or industrial service medal should be given to them. In my private opinion, ordinary decorations are better than special ones and will be more valuable. However, difficulties are in the way of the realization of this: out of the limit of awarding and many other procedures. Welfare Minister Tsuneo Kanemitsu is heartily supporting my move and has asked me to do all I can. If this idea is enlarged, the decoration will have to be applied to an agricultural domain. This is quite reasonable at a time when all Japanese are solidly behind the guns."

Opposition, however, is voiced by President Seko of the Board of Decorations to this move, the Yomiuri reports. He is credited by the journal for having said as follows:

"Chief Secretary Tomita has told me about the establishment of system of granting decorations to industrial warriors. This is a fairly big problem which requires painstaking study before the matter is realized. Pending completion of the investigation of awarding honors to those killed in war, I should like to withhold my opinion on this. Suppose this system is established under permission of His Majesty the Emperor, industrial warriors will have to be given the same honors as those of soldiers at the front. How the Government is thinking of this question I do not know, but, in my opinion, it is unthinkable that a special system of giving decorations to industrial warriors alone must be established."

RACE DEVELOPMENT IS TOLD BY WRITER

Fusion of Proto-Japanese Type With Various Other Tribes Unique, Says Hisano

How wonderfully the proto-Japanese blended with their predecessor tribes when the former came over first to Japan, four or five thousand years ago, is a historical miracle quite unique in the world in past or present times, says Kyuran Hisano in the May issue of the monthly magazine Sozo.

Mr. Hisano's article concerning the origin and development of the Japanese race reads roughly:

"As to the origin of the Yamoto race, students of Japanese history seem to be agreed in their reasoning that the race came into being as the result of the fusion of the proto-Japanese with various other tribes who had been living in Japan before the former tribe came here from Takamagahara, or seat of the Imperial Government. The fusion was a unique event in the racial history of the world as will be referred to later.

"Then comes the question, what were the proto-Japanese, or Tenson-minzoku and how did they come over here from the so-called Takamagahara, the identification of which has yet to be decided among historians. Another question is what were the predecessor tribes and how did they come to be so wonderfully blended with the proto-Japanese: I will try here to state in the briefest possible way, following the line of historical facts which are now generally known and agreed upon.

Peace-Loving People

"As to the proto-Japanese, they are believed to have been a tribe belonging to Tunguse. The Tunguse were a Turanian people living 4,000 to 5,000 years ago around Lake Baikal Manchuria, Mongolia and Siberia. These Tunguse were a peace-loving and generous-hearted people and they had a remarkable aptitude for adjusting themselves to their surroundings and would assimilate the neighboring tribes.

"The proto-Japanese, a species of these Tunguse, moved east to the long series of islands of Japan for some reasons not yet brought to light despite the close survey of interested scholars, some of whom hold for it a positive motive while others give a negative motive. The positive reason is some such motive as finding 'a place in the sun' according to ancient records. This reason apart, the most outstanding thing is the fact that these people had a wonderful capacity for blending and assimilating with the other tribes.

"About Takamagahara, from where came the ancestors of the Imperial Family, the location of that place has not yet been identified in the present stage of study of the Kojiki and Nihonshoki in which the name appears. Some historians allege that Takamagahara should be interpreted as denoting a comparatively large area of land. They believe the name was used to signify the whole area to the east of the Urals and the Altais including Mongolia, Manchuria, and Siberia. Another group of scholars, opposing the former, persist in the idea that Takamagahara meant a certain portion of Chosen or the province of Yamato (Wakayama Prefecture.)

"The final identification of the name, however, will not come easily in view of the present tendency among historians that they would not probe into the matter. They would, they say, rather leave the mystic name just as it is.

"The homeland of Japan, before it was inhabited by the proto-Japanese, was the home of various tribes inclusive, according to the Kojiki, (Records of Ancient Things), of Kumaso, Hayato, Tsuchigumo, Emishi and Byo who chiefly lived in the north and south of Kyushu. These varied tribes, excepting the Emishi (barbarians from Siberia), are supposed by some to have been of the same origin. The tribes, because of the long years they had been living separately, finally became antagonistic to each other so that they came to be regarded as of different stock, even by themselves. This supposition however, is being attacked by authoritative quarters who maintain the theory of the different types of prehistoric tribes.

The Ainos

"The Emishi tribe, or more popularly called the Ainos, is the only one surviving in Japan in a practically unpolluted form. The study of the Aino, therefore, has so far been almost completely made. The most peculiar thing about these tribesmen is their language, it neither resembles the inflective languages of Europe nor the Ural-Altaic agglutinative tongues, nor to the isolated speech of China. The Aino language is regarded as a synthetic one having features found among different families of languages, while the language of Japan proper is counted among the Ural-Altaic family.

"The Aino on the other hand, has peculiarites of their physical build and color of skin. Among the things alleged to have been used by the ancient Aino is earthenware called stripped ware (jomon doki), which makes a fine contrast to the figural ware yayoishi doki) believed to have been the work of the proto-Japanese. The designs seen on the two kinds of ware are remarkably different to one another.

"As regards the different stocks of other tribes, the allegation is now being supported by analogies coming from archaeological and biographical studies. The people who lived around the province of Izumo, according to the allegation, were of the same origin as the proto-Japanese. The Kumaso and the Byo tribes are supposed to have been from Indonesia. The Tsuchigumo was of either the same stock as the proto-Japanese or of Negritos found in Oceania. The Hayato is regarded as the refined Kumaso tribe.

"There is, for instance, a myth held as testimony by the advocates of the theory of different stocks. When Umisachihiko, the myth goes, was led by Prince Hoori to the land of the Wadatsumikuni (the Sea), he was carried in a basket-boat called Matashikatamano-kobune. This boat, it is said, must have been similar to those now in use in Annam and Thailand, where a basket ship, the meshes of which are covered with a dough made of cow-dung mixed with coconut oil, is employed.

"Another instance in the archaeological survey is the discovery of a copper gong found often buried in the ground, as one of the tools of the original Japanese. The survey is concluding that the gong is of the same design with that in use now in the islands south of India. Among other instances given for the same allegation are the supposed manner of house building by the original tribes, a myth concerning sword hilts and various other myths relating to the sea.

Alleged Fusion

"Lastly I will trace how the alleged fusion was achieved between the proto-Japanese and their predecessor inhabitants and when it was made. About the time required for the complete fusion, we have little in old records to serve as the answer. However, it is generally believed that the time needed for the complete union of the different tribes was a tremendously long period. Historians agree that the trial fusion started a few thousand years before the reign over Yamato was proclaimed by the first Emperor Jimmu Tenno.

"Then it is easy to believe that tribal wars and frictions have been repeated innumerable times since the reign of the Emperor Jimmu till we have as the legitimate inhabitants of Japan, the Yamato race, the very essence of harmoniously fused tribes. This fusion, as far as I could ascertain, was a unique one of the history of the world. It is not like that seen in the Netherlands East Indies people and the Malayan natives, nor similar to that resulting from the blending of the British, German and other stocks.

"This fusion, I repeat, is neither chemical nor physical. If some other phrase may be borrowed to describe it, it may be said to be seen in the process of the growth of life. After various tribes were adopted into the system of the proto-Japanese, there appeared a new race with a common ideal and way of life."

7,000 CANADIAN WORKERS TO GO ON 'HOLIDAY'

10,000 Miners in Nova Scotia May Also Join Walk-out

Domei

MONTREAL, April 29.—Work "holidays" affecting more than 7,000 operatives in war industries have been ordered by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee allied to the American Congress for Industrial Organization in protest against alleged company violations of Government labor rulings.

The "holidays" will affect more than 3,400 workers at the Algoma Steel Mills, Ontario, who will start their strike at midnight, and, effective Friday, 3,500 employes of the Dominion Steel and Coal Company, at Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Work already has stopped at the National Steel Car Company in Ontario, and the Peck Rolling Mills, Montreal, where a total of more than 3,000 are employed.

Labor leaders hinted that, in addition, 10,000 miners might strike in Nova Scotia and that 1,000 other steel workers also might join the general walkout if a settlement of the strike is delayed.

Useful in Dark

I.N.S.

FORT ORD, California, April 21.—It may seem like a minor difficulty to civilians, but one of a soldier's major problems is finding his own blanket roll in the dark.

So a system of "Braille" to enable men to identify their blanket rolls on night bivouacs is being tried out by the first battalion of the 53rd Infantry.

Devised by Sergeant Raymond N. Bach of D Company, the system calls for attachment to the blanket rolls of differently shaped pieces of leather, each indicating a different platoon. The number of holes punched in it determines the squad and the notches on the edge enable each man in the squad to identify his own roll.

Domei

SAN FRANCISCO, April 30.—After getting in the way of an empty bottle flung at him by an irate fan in a Los Angeles restaurant, Frank "Lefty" O'Doul, manager of the Pacific Coast League's San Francisco Seals, today was reported to be in grave danger of losing the sight of one eye. The assault on O'Doul was made after his assailant had insisted upon discussing with him a baseball game played in Los Angeles during the afternoon. The popular Seal manager was one of the members of the Big League All-Star team that toured Japan some years ago.

U.S. TROOPS DISPATCHED TO TRINIDAD ISLAND

New Contingents Going to Alaska Soon, Says, Chief of Staff

Domei

WASHINGTON, April 29.—General George Catlett Marshall, Chief of Staff, today told United States commerce officials that either today or tomorrow an army garrison will be dispatched to the British island of Trinidad, one of the bases acquired in the destroyers-for-bases deal last year.

He added that "very shortly" new bodies of troops would be moving to Alaska where the army already has garrisons on Kodiak Island. There are garrisons established also in Newfoundland and Bermuda, he said.

General Marshall did not reveal how many troops will be sent in the new contingents nor from where they will be dispatched.

The measure was sent to a conference committee on March 24 after the Senate had added minor amendments to the bill.

SOLDIERS WILL WORK IN SMALL FACTORIES

52 Working Places Will Be Built For Those Suffering From Chest Diseases, Wounds

Fifty-two small-scale factories will be constructed within the year among healthful environments throughout the Kanto district by the Military Affairs Protection Board for soldiers sent back from the front because of chest trouble and wounds of serious condition, says the Asahi.

On contrary with soldiers with ordinary wounds who hardly fail to find work after recovery, those sent back from the front because of chest trouble and serious wounds are having a hard time getting employed due to misunderstanding of their ailments of the side of the employers. They also find it difficult to continue their work in competition with their normal coworkers midst filtered air and noise at the factories. With the object of providing them with an opportunity to start afresh in life under proper consideration for their wounds and ailments, the Military Affairs Protection Board has been hurrying its preparations for the establishment of a Wounded Soldiers' Occupation Protection Association. Basic funds for this association totaling ¥2,000,000 have been recently allotted by the Government. The association will begin its work of constructing healthful working places for wounded soldiers in June.

According to the plans drawn out by the association, 52 small-scale factories for making parts of machinery for military use, wooden articles and clothing materials, will be established in healthful environments throughout the Kanto district. Each factory will have 15 workers. Two factories among the above 52 will be constructed in the suburbs of Tokyo and will each have about 100 workers. Special consideration will be taken in establishing facilities at the factories, making work there possible for former soldiers in accordance with the nature of their wounds and ailments. Working and resting periods will be fully adjusted so they can pursue their work at the factories with joy and satisfaction.

Wounded soldiers having families to support will be chiefly accepted at the factories. Proper care and attention of their health will be given through maintaining connections at the factories with clinics and health advisory boards in the prefecture. The two factories accepting 100 workers will chiefly employ former soldiers who are single. Dormitories with modern facilities will be built for them in the neighborhood of the factory. Besides installing a doctor at the dormitory, an auditorium, recreation room, athletic ground will be arranged and proper attention will be paid regarding the caloric value of their food. The factories will employ the wounded soldiers and begin work around February, next year.

Preparations at present are being taken by the Military Affairs Protection Board to reorganize the Wounded Soldiers' Occupation Protection Association into a special foundation with a capital of approximately ¥20,000,000. According to the Board's five-year-plan in this concern, similar factories will be established at different places throughout the country. Factories with 15 workers will be constructed at 600 localities, these with 100 employes at 40 places while factories with 200 workers will be established at five places in the country. Approximately 15,000 wounded soldiers will be given work at the factories. Besides the above factories, farms, grazing pastures will be managed by the board which will also establish a laboratory with the object of finding adequate occupation for the wounded soldiers.

2 SOFTBALL GAMES SET THIS WEEKEND

Pirates Meeting Solons and Cardinals Playing Ancient Mariners at Bay City Club

Two mixed softball games will be played at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club this weekend, the Pirates meeting the Solons at 3 p.m. today and the Cardinals playing the Ancient Mariners at the same time on Sunday.

The Pirates-Solons fracas will decide which team will gain the league leadership for the time being at least, both having won their contests in the season's opening doubleheader last Sunday. The Ancient Mariners and the Cardinals will be fighting it out to see which squad will take possession of the cellar position.

The Pirates handed the Cardinals a 22 to 10 beating last weekend and have high hopes of taking the Solons into camp this afternoon. They have a couple of heavy hitters in Captain "Bucky" Harriss and Johnny da Silva, and a number of good fielders with lots of speed. The Solons, who eked out a close 6 to 5 decision from the Ancient Mariners last weekend, have plenty of batting strength. They expect their "murderers' row" of Niles Bond, Captain Ray Devin and Reggie Roberts to bring in enough runs to down the Pirates. Roberts won the batting honors last Sunday with two homers and a two-bagger which brought in five runs.

The Cardinals will present a considerably stronger lineup on Sunday than they did a keep ago. Pete Kipp, of baseball fame, will be making his softball debut and will probably take on the hurling assignment. "Jock" Shearer will also bolster the Cardinals, and this pair is expected to add considerably to the batting strength as well as defensively.

The Ancient Mariners will be seeing red in more ways than one when they face the Cardina's. They believe all the breaks went against them in their last tilt, which they lost by one run. With some of the best women softball players in their line-up they will try to prove on Sunday that they have as good a team as any in the league.

The line-ups will probably be as follows:

Pirates: Miss V. Albeck, Miss H. Darbier, Miss P. Rau, Miss L. Sa ter, F. R. Harriss (captain), E. Eastlake, F. Eastlake, W. Blamey, C. Meyers, L. Frank, G. W. Gorman, P. O'Neill and J. da Silva.

Solons: Miss W. Dunning, Miss M. Prohaska, Miss M. Stevens, Miss E. Papendieck, F. R. Devin (captain), N. Bond, R. Roberts, S. G. Birlous, L. Dance, F. Rodriguez, W. A. Tomlinson, G. da Silva, C. T. Jones, R. Perkins and C. da Souza.

Cardinals: Miss C. da Costa, Miss H. Lord, Miss J. Darbier, Miss G. Andreis, E. da Silva (captain), M. L. Russell, P. Kipp, E. Dentici, A. A. F. Shearer, F. da Silva, V. Levy, J. Dynan, C. Fernandes and R. Child.

Ancient Mariners: Miss T. Planas, Miss L. Andreis, Mrs. M. L. Russell, Mrs. E. Tanner, C. Heseltine (captain), M. C. Cooke (coach), G. E. Beatty, H. A. Bird, J. da Costa, G. R. Fachtmann, D. Dentici, D. Harvey, P. H. Lord and H. Schoene.

MAY DAY HONORS GO TO DR. MESSERSCHMITT

Max Amann and Wilhelm Ohnesorge Also Given Medals

Domei

BERLIN, May 1.—May Day in Germany was devoted to the worker and his part in the nation's wartime structure with three men being singled out for special achievements in this field as "Pioneers of labor," among whom was Dr. Wilhelm Messerschmitt, creator of the "Best pursuit planes and destroyer craft in the world."

In a ceremony at the Messerschmitt airplane factory in Augsburg, west of Munich, Deputy Fuehrer Rudolf Hess conferred medals on Max Amann, Reich leader of the German press, and Dr. Wilhelm Ohnesorge, Minister of Posts, as well as Dr. Messerschmitt.

In Berlin, Dr. Robert Ley, Reich Organization Leader of the Nazi Party and leader of the German Labor Front, addressed the workers praising them for "forging the best weapons and the best equipment for the best soldiers in the world."

No less loyal than the men fighting at the front are the workers who are contributing as much as peasants and soldiers to the "liberty, beauty and honor of Germany's future," Dr. Ley said.

After conferring the honors on the three Nazi leaders at Augsburg, Mr. Hess addressed the assembled workers of the Messerschmitt factory. Speaking warmly of the Messerschmitt planes, Mr. Hess stressed the part that German industrial worker will play in Germany's future.

SHANGHAI COUNCIL ELECTS

Briton and Japanese Elected Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Respectively

Domei

SHANGHAI, May 1.—At the first meeting of the newly elected councilors of the Shanghai Municipal Council which was held from 4:30 p.m. today at the conference room of the Council, J. H. Liddell, Briton and the managing director of the Liddell Brothers & Company, and Issaku Okamoto, former Japanese Consul-General at Singapore, were elected respectively as the chairman and vice-chairman of the Council. Although the Chungking side tried desperately to check the opening of the meeting, the first meeting was successfully held and members of various committees of the Council were elected.

New Plane for Luftwaffe

This new plane, the Focke-Wulf 189, is the latest among the many types of craft employed by Marshal Goering's air force. The high speed machine, equipped with several guns and machine-guns, has special advantages as a reconnaissance craft by the peculiar construction of its body, giving the crew a perfect all-round visibility.

FINANCIAL LEADERS WILL BE CONSULTED

Government Will Call for Their Advice on Innovation in Official System

The leaders of the financial circles shortly to be invited by the Government to attend a round-table discussion to be held in connection with the proposed innovation in the official system seem strongly in favor of the Government's epoch-making move to solicit civilian counsel for Governmental enterprises.

This tendency is noted in views expressed in the Asahi by Vice-Governor Juichi Tsushima of the Bank of Japan, President Aiichiro Fujiyama of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce and Industry, and Vice-President Eiichi Okabe of the Tokyo Electric.

Mr. Tsushima says:

Tsushima's Views

"Commissioning part of the administrative affairs to civilian brains will bring efficiency. This is being shown in the execution of a substantial part of the afiairs concerning adjustment of funds by the Bank of Japan. If these affairs are to be attended to by Government officials, the Government needs many officials solely to be entrusted with the affairs, and the result will be less efficiency.

"There is, however, a fear in this connection that civilian brains, when formally installed as Government officials, will gradually become what the ordinary officials are at present. They will soon take on the so-called official habits and be tinted with many evil sides of the habits. This is the reason why various commissions thus far established within the Government, including civilians, are not working as effectively as intended. Here lies the necessity for the Government to be careful in the functioning of these bodies.

"The next necessity in my view is harmonious cooperation among the varied branches of the Administration, without which the proposed new national structure will be a long way off. Now, for instance, the supervision of insurance business is being done separately by the three Ministries of Finance, Agriculture and Forestry, and Commerce and Industry, a fact only proving an obstruction smooth conduct of the business."

Mr. Fujiyama said:

Simplification Needed

"When, firstly, I survey the current administrative system, I must admit its complication. The Government has many superflous branches. I would suggest a radical simplification of the Ministerial divisions of the Cabinet. As regards prefectural jurisdiction there is much to be adjusted. I am rather of opinion that the organization of the Planning Board will be much strengthened. These innovations will meet many difficulties before they are realized. However, the Government ought to materialize them at all costs, as unavoidable in these times of national emergency.

"Then there is the question of revising the Civil Service Ordinance. The revision ought to be made so that civilian experts can be freely taken into the Government. At the same time, some effective plans will be introduced so that the officials will function with efficiency. Another thing is the training of the present personnel of the Government with the aim that the officials shall gradually acquire all necessary information for the execution of their respective branches of administrative affairs. This, I hope, will be realized by keeping the officials longer in their respective positions."

Mr. Okabe commented:

American Example

"As to how to most effectively hire civilian brains for Government use, what is now going on in the United States concerning the same question offers a good reference. There are dollar men in America, who, all leading figures in civilian circles, are assisting the Government for the reward of $1 a year. The Communications Ministry is now reported to be engaged in appraisal of the cost of establishing a power distribution plant, with the assistance of many civilian experts. This will be an instance where the effective employment of street brains is practiced.

"As I suspect at present, some civilian brains transplanted into Government circles are rather restlessly settled in their new positions. This, if it is true, must be eliminated through some adjustments of the official system.

"What I mean by closer relations among the administrative branches is not the lukewarm one so far introduced by many Administrations, but a more drastic one. This will not be materialized as long as the present system of the administrative organization persists. The system must undergo a radical innovation before the desired closer cooperation among the varied organs of the Government is brought into being."

INFORMATION BOARD MEETS LEADERS IN ALL FIELDS

To Confer Next With Retired Army and Navy Officers

The Board of Information which conferred with Japan's leading social education leaders on May 1 to enlist their cooperation for guiding public opinion along the lines of the national emergency will confer with other leaders of the nation for the same purpose on May 7, 8 and 13, according to the Nichi Nichi.

On May 1, the board's leaders held a conference with leading social leaders including Beiho Takashima, Shintaro Sasaki, Kakusho Takagami, Tokio Imai, Totsudo Kato and Tsunekichi Mizuno to discuss current topics.

Because the Board of Information considers the meeting highly beneficial, Vice-President Tatsuo Hisatomi and other leading staff members of the board will confer with noted retired Army and Navy officers on May 7, with foremost journalists and scholars on May 8, and with leading women social workers on May 13.

U.S. ARMY CREATES MECHANIZED UNITS

Marshall Will Build Up Armored Division Up to Eight From Present Two

United Press

NEW YORK, April 29.—Not on men alone will the United States Army depend.

Chancellor Hitler's whirlwind victories have taught American generals the value of speedy, maneuverable armored divisions. On March 21, General George C. Marshall, the chief of staff, announced that the army plans to build its armored divisions up to eight from the present two, if and when the army reaches a strength of 2,800,000 men. The United States Army is on the way to becoming the World's best equipped. This table tells the story.

Equipment on Hand, May 30, 1940	Equipment on Order January 1, 1941 (Incl. British and foreign material orders)
Aircraft: 2,500 planes of all types.	Aircraft: 50,000 planes (approximately half for Britain). 18,000 for army, 7,000 for navy.
Field Artillery: 275 Modernized guns and howitzers (75's and 155's) 186 Modern trench mortars.	Field Artillery: 17,000 heavy guns and howitzers. 25,000 light guns. 13,000 trench mortars.
Anti-Aircraft Guns: 463 anti-aircraft guns. 1,014 anti-aircraft machine guns.	Anti-Aircraft Guns: 2,240 anti-aircraft guns for early delivery undisclosed number on order.
Equipment on Hand, May 30, 1940	Equipment on Order, January 1, 1941
	Anti-aircraft Guns: 1,157 machine guns for early delivery, undisclosed number on order.
Small Arms: 3,000,000 old rifles. 38,000 semi-automatic rifles. 228 anti-tank guns. 83 machine guns.	Small Arms: 1,300,000 new rifles. 400,000 automatic rifles. 1,634 anti-tank guns for early delivery undisclosed number on order. 300,000 machine guns. 33,000,000 shells, loaded.
Combat vehicles: 460 old type tanks. 28 new light and medium tanks. 599 scout and combat cars.	Combat Vehicles 9,200 tanks. 50,000 trucks. 2,000 scout and combat cars for immediate delivery undisclosed number on order.

These trucks, tanks and scout and combat cars will play an important role. They are rolling off assembly lines in Detroit daily, and being taken for trial runs over the most rugged terrain.

Another move to streamline the army has been the reduction in size of the divisions. The new army divisions, called triangular divisions, are made up of three regiments, totalling about 12,000 soldiers, as compared with the ponderous World War divisions of 27,000 men.

This eliminates artillery regiments and brigade entirely and attaches a battalion (about 450 men) of artillery to each regiment. Under this plan, the infantry commander has cannon with him, and does not have to defer to the rank and judgment of the artillery colonel or brigadier general every time he needs heavy guns.

If General Marshall's plan of eight mechanized divisions is worked out, it will mean that a corps of 36,000 hard-hitting men will be available for the whirlwind maneuvers that proved of such importance to the German armies in the Low Countries and France, and which the British used to such advantage against the Italians in Libya.

Other innovations, borrowed from the Russian and German armies, are ski and parachute troops.

Ski troops have been training all winter on the powdery snow tracks of upper New York State, New England, the Midwest, and the Northwest. They wear white uniforms which camouflage them perfectly against the background of snow and make them invisible to reconnoitering airplanes. The effectiveness of ski troops under certain conditions was proven during the Russo-Finnish war.

The parachutist has a vital function in modern warfare. His duty is to drop behind enemy lines and commit sabotage. He must burn supplies, disrupt communications, bomb factories, and stir up unrest among the civilian population.

For this work, parachutists carry an unbelievable amount of paraphernalia. In addition to an automatic rifle, Tommy gun, hand-grenades, rations for a day, and a collapsible bicycle. Chutists attacking in groups bring with them light and heavy machine guns, Browning anti-aircraft machine guns, 37 millimeter and .50 caliber anti-tank guns, infantry mortars, demolition equipment, portable radio sets, aircraft signal panels and pyrotechnics.

How many men are being trained in the parachute corps is the Army's secret. But it suffices to say that at Fort Benning, Ga., one battalion of 450 men has been thoroughly schooled in this type of warfare, and other groups are learning in other parts of the country.

UNIVERSITY TEAMS PUT ON REAL SHOW

Home Runs, Upsets, Bleacher Throws Feature Hosei, Waseda Victories

With home-runs featuring the contest, Hosei staved off a belated Keio rally to emerge victorious, 8-6 and Waseda edged out St. Paul's, 4-2 in a pair of Big Six ball games played Saturday at the Meiji Shrine stadium.

In the opening game of the day, Keio and Hosei really put on a show. Practically everything in the books happened and some sort of a record for Big Six league games was established as three mighty homers bounced into the bleachers.

Morishita, Ohdate and Betto each connected for four-baggers. While the wind, which was ever present, may have had something to do with this bit of heavy shelting there was no denying that each of the balls hit into the far bleachers were well kissed.

Going into the last of the eighth, Hosei apparently had the game tucked away as it held an 8-0 lead, having lashed Shiraki and Yamaura for eight hits, including Morishita's home-run.

But the Keio nine was just starting. Held to four hits they suddenly turned on Morishita with a vengeance and fury that astounded even themselves.

They walloped Morishita for four runs, chasing him off the mound and finished up with Ohdate's c'out into the leftfield bleachers off relief pitcher Yuki, for the fifth tally. Then in their final turn at bat, Betto leaned on Yuki's fast one to account for the third homer of the game, the longest hit of the day.

Aided by some atrocious fielding on the part of all three Keio outfielders, Hosei had all the better of the early going. A pair of singles and two costly miscues gave them three runs in the fourth. Yamagata opened this inning with a hit to center. Morishita was retired on a liner to right. Nagasaka then hit into what appeared to be a perfect twin-killing but Nagara fumbled. Fukii then came through with a sharp hit to right and when Betto let the ball tunnel through him, Fukii pulled up at third and Hosei was two runs in the lead. The third run scoring on Urichida's fly to right

Then in the fifth, Morishita smacked his homer and the following inning Hosei put the game on ice with four runs. Yamaura, who replaced Shiraki walked the first two batters. A perfectly placed bunt caught Uno flat-footed and the bags were loaded with no outs. Torimaru then bounced a double to left field and when Kakei tunneled the ball, three runs scored. The fourth came on Morishita's high fly to left.

In the night-cap, Ishiguro and Yoshimura put on a pitching duel with each giving out but four hits. In the third inning both teams scored a run and only in the seventh was the deadlock broken as Waseda tallied three runs. St. Paul's made their final bid with a run in the ninth but fell short by two runs.

Record Reviews

Royal Cavalcade Coronation March by Ketelbey has been recorded by the massed bands of the Aldershot and Eastern Commands, conducted by Leslie Seymour, on the first side of a Victor small black label disc. On the reverse side the band of the Third Battalion of the 9th Infantry Spandau Regiment has recorded the Koenig Karl March.

Comparing the two style of bands is interesting. The Spandau goes in for pompous brass work and tuba leads, but the Aldershot band is a finer balanced group. However, here are two rousing marches, well played, very clearly recorded without any jangle in full forte passages. Splendid for schools.

The massed bands of the Aldershot Command also play Marching Through Georgia, with the Victor Band giving Thunder and Blazes March on the reverse side. The Aldershot arrangement of music with the bass drum standing out so prominently reminds one of a Salvation Army band drummer trying to steal the show. The Victor selection has stolen the entire theme of Gilbert and Sullivan's tune Three Little Maids From School Are We, after which it blazes away through a hodge-podge lacking originality. But again both are good march numbers to gladden the feet of school children.

Since all the world is on the march, Victor is trying to keep up for here is a third march disc. Liberty Bell played by the band of H. M. Royal Air Force conducted by Squadron Leader O'Donnell, and Under the Double Eagle played by Sousa's Band. Of the six marches the best music and certainly the finest brass ensemble is the Royal Air Force band in Liberty Bell. Sousa's Band is magnificent also in the popular Double Eagle. If one wishes to get out of step with the marching present and forget dull care for a few minutes, then put this disc on your machine and play boy.

Joe Sudy and His Orchestra render two refreshing bits of danceable music on a Victor small black label record. It will do the classicist good to forget his Bach and Beethoven long enough to enjoy It's a Hap-hap-happy Day, and I Hear a Dream, both feature numbers in Paramount's technicolor cartoon film Gulliver's Travels. Both have vocal refrains sung well if not by operatic stars, and the colorful music is played just right. Bits of music like this are as an oasis in this dry life. The first is a quick step and the second number a slow step dance.

When you weary of the marching you may try a tango to Jalousie Tango and Kobberbryllup Tango both played by Jens Warny and His Orchestra on a Victor dance disc. Here are two of the best tango bits heard for many moons in Tokyo. Both are very melodious, good harmonies, fascinating rhythmic lift and splendidly performed, combined with good recording. If you can find a place to dance, get this record.

Selections from Verdi's Il Trovatore and Rigoletto as performed by Macari and His Dutch Accordion Serenaders, on a Victor small black label record, are attractive novelties as arranged. Of course if you wish your grand opera straight then do not bother to hear this disc. The accordion ensemble is augmented by other instruments and is a colorful group that plays very well.

Victor has an issue of six small records with green labels, perhaps an album series, of Spanish, Cuban, and South American dances, songs and marches all in the popular vein. If one has a taste for this kind of stuff, which ranges from the quiet and suggestive to the wild cabaret music, then these records are what you will wish to hear The usual accordion groups are assisted by piano and other instruments to relieve the monotony, but a couple of the songs have simple guitar accompaniments.

The first disc is La Mimada (milonga) by Edgardo Donata and His Muchachos, and a song, Tu Tristeza, sung by Las Tampitas and supported by Ismael Morenzo and His Orquesta.

The second contains Derecho Wiejo (tango) by Juan D'Arienzo and His Orquesta, and Bajo los Cielos de Tecuman (zamba) by Martha de los Rios.

Los Cuatro Huasos (quartet) renders Entre Junio y Julio (cueca) and Alla en el Rancho Grande (ranchera song) a wild number sung by Tito Guizar with guitar accompaniment, in which the singer tries to whoop it up in cowboy fashion, but in spite of the best he can do it is quite thin. This is the third disc in the series.

The fourth record has Triguenita (rumba) by Enrique Bryon and His Cuban Orquesta, and Alegre Conga by Conjuato Matamorez with vocal soloist.

Anivena, a typical Paraguayan polka based on a folksong, and Nda che Resanairi Gueteri Nde Jhegui, a Paraguayan galop, played by a native Paraguayan orchestra under Felix Cardoso and song by Cardoso-Martinez, fills the fifth disc.

The last record contains a song, Saudades do meu Barracao by Banda da Lua, and on the reverse side a marchsong, En Sou Um, by Gyro Monteiro.

This kind of music has its followers and fans and if one likes it, then he is in for a good time. The writer confesses to the wish to be far removed. For this sort of music the performances are no doubt good and the recording thoroughly satisfactory.

TWO DUTCH MINISTERS ATTEND NEWS MEETING

Welter and van Kleffens Are Present at Union of Journalists' Dinner

Reuters

BATAVIA, May 1.—The two Netherlands ministers who are visiting the Netherlands East Indies, E. N. van Kleffens, Foreign Minister, and J. I. M. Welter, Minister for the Colonies, were the guests last night of the Union of Journalists, the Netherlands' board of which was quickly transplanted from the occupied Netherlands to the Netherlands East Indies, in order to symbolize and stress the still existing freedom of the press, of which the Netherlands has always been proud.

In a speech during the dinner party, Mr. Welter stressed the importance of this measure, pointing out that a free press was a necessity in a democratic country. The minister reviewed the spiritual ties, as shown by recent events which had taken place, between the Netherlands East Indies and the mother-country, resulting in the "most remarkable fact that factual separation between them had led to a feeling of co-existence, unknown hitherto, and a spiritual unity which left no space whatever for controversies, as feelings of real love were now demonstrated daily by the whole population toward 'Sweet Holland' and all it represents."

Japanese Superstition

The Home Ministry has just announced its crusade against the lunar calendar as the source of a host of superstitious beliefs in this country. This decision comes on the heels of the ban recently placed on superstitious practices not uncommon among a surprisingly large section of society. The campaign now officially to be conducted as "part of the new order movement" is unquestionably to be approved since no superstition of any sort should have its place within the new structure of the country if it is to be efficient and rational. However, the idea of the lunar calendar itself being responsible for superstitious beliefs seems quite open to question. The wisdom of discarding it just because superstitious practices are associated with the counting of the moon or its changing phases seems even more questionable.

The strongest argument against the lunar calendar is that it is not adopted universally. But that would hardly be reason enough to discard it where it has proved useful for so many centuries. For of its utility or serviceability there can be no question. History itself is its best advocate or champion. Even coming down to recent times, the lunar calendar was officially abandoned in this country in the year 1872. But as a matter of fact, the calendar has been used little the less for the official order. Even in large cities like Osaka, where more progressive ideas are supposed to obtain, the old calendar is followed by many trading and other people.

A similar case was noted in China. When the revolutionary Nationalist regime was set up at Nanking, the lunar calendar was abolished. But the farmers and others persistently refused to adopt the new solar calendar. Sowing of seeds and planting of corps were planned, as always in the past, according to the movement of the moon. The idea of computing dates for tidal movement by the solar system would be scouted as strongly in Japan as in China.

The lunar calendar, if less scientific in principle, is based on experience. Experience in this case means statistical data accumulated over a vast expanse of time. For this reason the calendar is well adapted to the conditions peculiar to this part of the world. If not international like the solar system, the lunar calendar better comports with the practical purposes of men whose work requires full consideration of the conditions of heaven, earth and water.

The bad reputation which the lunar calendar has latterly acquired is not due to any fault inherent in its principle or system, but to the unfortunate accident of its being adapted to the purpose of astrologers, alchemists and diviners. The Chinese calendar began to take on mystic and esoteric color when during the age of civil wars strategists and diviners linked their art with the calendar, explaining the movements of the five elements of nature in terms of the moon. Worse confusion developed when the lunar calendar was next made a basis for the sexagenerary cycle represented by the zodiacal signs of animals. The composite result of these strange devices was seen in 822 in what is known as the Senmei Calendar.

This fantastic calendar was introduced to Japan even before Buddhism. It was in common use in its original form, without change or revision, for more than eight centuries, from 862 to 1684. The theory and practice of divination based on the calendar met in Japan as in China with instant success. Through the Heian period or the reign of court nobility at Kyoto hosts of diviners are said to have done flourishing business not only in the capital but also in the country. Its influence was seen nowhere stronger than among the Buddhist priesthood and the court nobility, the fountains of knowledge and learning of the time. Its influence permeated the life of the country and continued through the age of feudalism.

Under the legal code issued in the first year of the eighth century, historically known as the Taiho code, the office of divination was provided under the "ministry of Central Affairs" and put in charge of astronomical observation and calendar study. The prime minister was to "administer justice through the four seas, govern the realm, make clear the principles of morality, and acquaint himself with divination." It is no exaggeration to say that there was no religious sect, no line of intellectual activity but accepted the principle of the positive and negative forces forming the basic rule of nature and human life. Even the medicine of the Tokugawa period was based on the cosmic principle of China that had been learned from China's empiric healers.

The superstitious beliefs implanted so deeply on the minds of people are not expected to be eradicated overnight. It is common knowledge today that no family would hold a funeral on the day of "tomobiki," the day of repetition; for the common notion is that whatever is done on that day is certain to repeat itself. As rare is a wedding on the day of "butsumetsu," the day of Buddha's death and for that reason likely to be a day of as great misfortune for anyone. Even many men on the sunny side of forty would mournfully shake their heads should they hear that someone was starting to build a house on the day of "sanrimbo," the day fateful for any sort of new construction.

When superstition holds so strong a grip on the minds of people even to this day, it is no wonder that there are unwaning demands for the lunar calendar, nor surprise that there are commercial enterprises successfully engaged in its publication. This situation has persisted side by side with the process of modernization that has been progressing in the country. One has but to take a stroll in the street in any town and see how fortune tellers on the curb are being patronized by people of all ages.

The lunar calendar is used by all fortune tellers and diviners. Their stock of knowledge is based on cryptic calculations of the moon and stars. But it would be wrong to think that the ban on the calendar would put an end to the superstitious beliefs that drive people to diviners' shops and stalls, because their superstitions derive not from the calendar but from ignorance. The best means to counter ignorance will always be education. This point may be either overlooked or underestimated seeing that the current crusade against superstition, as seen in the abolition of the lunar calendar, is proposed by the Ministry not of Education, as it should be, but of Home Affairs.

Bond Redemption

Behind the purchase in New York by the Japanese Government of its own national 5½ per cent bonds to the face value of $1,397,000 lies a story of confidence and sound finance. These bonds had responded to a selling movement to present an attractive purchase, possibly at a cheaper price than would be necessary on maturity. Altogether these purchases ran over six months and will yield a substantial profit to this country. Margins of ¥1,535,981 were put up and formal settlement of the account is expected today.

In its history of international finance Japan has never failed to repay a loan. Its rating among bankers is first class, or A1 as they say in the credit books. Probabilities are that American holders of Japanese bonds have been frightened into selling by misleading propaganda. For even were America and Japan to become embroiled the responsibility of repayment would still exist, and it is part of the Japanese character to meet obligations faithfully and promptly.

When bonds are offered at bargain prices Japan does not await maturity but goes into the market itself to redeem by purchase. This shows strong belief in the continued prosperity and ability of the country to pay its debts, as always. It also reveals a constant eye on refinancing possibilities. This system of national, state, country or city refinancing came into use in America and Canada about 20 years ago. By repurchasing bonds paying high rates of interest and reissuing at lower rates, both Government and private industry made money and consolidated debt. Now this transaction is on the same basis, with the Finance Ministry pocketing the difference between the market price and the redemption price.

This principle may be continued on a larger scale, as the scope of foreign currency holdings allows, over a large part of the external loans of Japan. At the end of the 1937-38 fiscal year the total outstanding foreign debt was ¥1,300,283,588. There had been no issues since 1933-34. In five years prior to 1938 Japan had reduced its external loan account by about ¥130,000,000, thus "paying off the mortgage" despite the financial demands for China and Manchoukuo. With a foreign and domestic loan burden of only ¥126 per capita, not counting the last two budgets, the Japanese people are in a favorable position and have not unduly pledged their future.

HOW TO MAINTAIN NAVAL POWER VITAL QUESTION OF U.S. DEFENSE

Writer Criticizes Isolationist Idea; Declares Ocean Never Helped One's Self Defense

By ARTHUR J. MARDER

Christian Science Monitor

National defense must mean hemisphere defense, preventing the establishment of hostile bases within striking distance of the Panama Canal and the United States proper. That is the assumption on which the following argument is based. This problem of hemisphere defense is political, economic, cultural; but, first and foremost, it is a military one. The Wheeler-Nye-Lindbergh school of thought has been preaching the totally false doctrine that oceans are defensive barriers. They ask how the Germans could ever get across the Atlantic to attack America when they are having so much trouble in crossing a 25-mile ishpond.

Poor Alfred Thayer Mahan! How restless he must be in his tomb these days! For it is one of the great principles of warfare that oceans have never, anytime and anywhere in history, been protective barriers against foreign invasion. On the contrary, the sea is the highway of naval power. It is not the English Channel which is Britain's shield, but the Royal Navy which floats on and near that body of water.

Troops cannot be transported overseas in large numbers except where naval command has been secured on the waters over which they they must pass. The reasons are, briefly: (1) a troop convoy is a large, slow, and vulnerable target; (2) a secure line of communications is a prerequisite for a steady flow of reinforcements and supplies; and (3) troops cannot land on a hostile shore against a sturdy resistance, save with a powerful air support sufficient to establish temporary air superiority at the time and place of landing. Such air support is possible only when an enemy has established air bases within effective range of the disembarkation points, since planes carrying military loads cannot as yet fly across the Atlantic or the Pacific. A military-naval expedition would have to set up air bases in the Western Hemisphere . . . which brings us back to sea power. In the last analysis, then, our security is a question of sea power, of which ships and bases are the two fundamentals.

Isolationists' Viewpoint

If we have enough sea power, we can disregard alien threats. The isolationists point to the two-ocean fleet now building as proof that the Navy will be strong enough for any contingency. The cold facts do not justify such smugness. At present the United States has 15 battleships in commission and 1 under construction. Our present battleship margin will be ample, if hardly excessive, in three to five years, and we have the great advantage of a central strategic position.

However, and this is the all-important point, our edge would inevitable disappear within a few years after a British collapse. If the Nazis conquer Britain, the shipbuilding resources of the Triplice would be vastly greater than our own. How much greater it is difficult to determine. The lowest professional estimate I have seen is a Triplice superiority of 300 per cent, which happens to be Mr. Knox's estimate. Admiral Yarnell, among others, puts it as high as 600 per cent. No matter how much we talk about a two-ocean navy, we cannot get away from the stark fact that we can command the eastern Pacific and the western Atlantic until Britain falls . . . and not much longer then, if the Triplice decides to build a superior armada. The United States has no chance of outbuilding a totalitarian Europe and Asia. This supreme fact will condition my remaining remarks.

Let us now examine the question of bases, the other great element of sea power. Here it must be remembered that the operating radius of a fleet is only 2,000 to 2,500 miles, and is more nearly the former. Sustained operations in the vast Atlantic and Pacific are not possible without the possession of intermediate points of support—stepping-stones for refueling, repairs, and reconnaissance purposes.

The great base at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, is the United States key position in the Pacific. While it remains in our hands, with a strong battle fleet based there, no hostile force can approach the Pacific Coast.

Serious Obstacles

Unfortunately, there are serious obstacles to setting up a distant blockade. United States outposts in the western Pacific are not naval bases, owing to the restrictions of the Washington Disarmament Conference of 1921. More recently, the fear of offending Japan has meant that we have left Guam, 1,300 miles from Yokohama, and nearly 4,000 from Pearl Harbor, potentially the key to the western Pacific, practically undefended and useless as a fleet base. Moreover, Cavite (Manila), 1,500 miles from Yokohama, has not been improved very much since the Spanish-American war and lacks repair facilities for big ships. Incidentally, the Japanese have a powerful air base in the Pescadores, some 730 miles from Manila. Furthermore, the Japanese "mandated" islands, which surround Guam and block the approach to Manila, afford splendid opportunities for the operations of light craft, submarines, and planes. They would have to be neutralized before the fleet's communications to the western Pacific were secure.

Some authorities calculate that it would take one to two years for the Navy to mop up these islands and recapture Guam and Manila. There is still another difficulty. The Pacific fleet will not be able to operate efficiently as far west as the mandated islands (Jaluit in the Marshalls, the first objective, is 2,400 miles from Pearl Harbor) until the current naval projects at the intermediate bases of Johnston, Wake, and Midway Islands are completed.

A less risky and more immediately effective policy would be to arrange for the use of Singapore as an advanced base. Indeed, I rather believe that we have arrangements or a tacit understanding for the wartime use of Singapore's magnificent facilities. Singapore controls the western entrances to the South China Sea.

Defense Problem

What I am getting at is this: Britain's fall would complicate our defense problem in the Pacific and would wreck all our conceptions of Pacific strategy. Today, with Britain fighting and our Atlantic front, from Canada to Cape Horn, guarded, albeit indirectly by the British fleet we are free to concentrate our navy in the Pacific. So long as we can maintain a superior fleet in the Pacific, with probable access to Singapore, the chances of war would be in our favor. To make sure of Singapore, units of our Pacific fleet should be based there now.

Turning to the Atlantic, our defense position there may be divided into two sectors—that from Canada to Florida, and the Caribbean area. In both the new bases acquired from England improve our strategical position immeasurably. As regards the north Atlantic position, our chief ports on the Atlantic seaboard—Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Norfolk—plus the new advanced fleet and air base at Halifax and the mid-ocean air base at Bermuda form a secure base of operations for our Atlantic fleet. From this composite base the fleet can operate offensively against any enemy force approaching by the North Atlantic sea lanes, and can reach out to meet such a threat almost to the shores of Europe.

In default of advanced bases in the North Atlantic, an Axis fleet could not conduct operations in North American waters. Given the occupation of Irish bases, Iceland, and the Azores, however, as a probable aftermath of a British defeat, the situation would be transformed. Canada and the United States would then be within the radius of Axis fleet operations.

The Caribbean Zone

More important militarily than the North Atlantic sector is the Caribbean zone—the antechamber to the Panama Canal and the corridor of over half of the United States seaborne trade. As regards the Canal itself, most experts consider it to be almost immune to an attack from the Pacific due to the tremendous distances involved. We are not taking any chances, however, especially after the navy war games of a few years ago, when an aircraft carrier succeeded in eluding the defending fleet and anchoring within bombing distance of the Canal. To meet this danger of air bombing, in 1939 the United States began to build a third set of locks, which will be completed in 1944. To make doubly sure, the United States ought to buy or lease the Galapagos Islands from Ecuador. These are the only offshore islands on the hemisphere's western coast which possess a roomy bay capable of being made submarine proof.

The real danger to the Canal would come from the east, via one or more of the nearly score of passages through the Caribbean Islands. These islands, from the Bahamas to Trinidad, form a natural chain of defensive positions which control every approach into the Caribbean Sea. Thanks to the new bases, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Antigua, St. Lucia, Trinidad, and British Guiana, on top of Guantanamo, Puerto Rico, and St. Thomas, the United States controls all the passages.

Entrance to the Caribbean through any of the passages could be denied by aircraft and flotilla craft to any fleet without much trouble. Even a superior enemy battle fleet would hesitate to enter these narrow waters infested with submarines and bombers, and far from a friendly dockyard. But until the new bases are ready—and construction is only just starting—the United States present Caribbean defense line of Guantanamo-Puerto Rico-St. Thomas does not assure naval control over the Lesser Antilles, at the extreme south of the Caribbean island chain, and the many passages among them into the Caribbean.

U.S. Strategical Weakness

A strong enemy fleet could penetrate the Caribbean through the Lesser Antilles, because there are some 10 or 12 channels available, and it would not be feasible to plant a submarine division in each one and keep it there on station; and, too, the southernmost of these channels are rather beyond the range of efficient air patrol from our present southernmost base at St. Thomas. That we have no point of control south of St. Thomas is the United States' great strategical weakness in the Caribbean. Our strategic position in that area will be excellent when the new bases are ready at British Guiana, Antigua, St. Lucia, and especially Trinidad. This will take several years—an argument for gaining time by aiding Britain.

Not only would the completion of the ring of bases complete our command of the entire Caribbean zone, but it would be of great assistance should it become necessary to undertake operations in the South Atlantic. New United States bases at Trinidad and British Guiana carry our naval power 500 miles closer to Brazilian and Argentine ports.

The newest German bombers can just about span the bottleneck between the two continents. It is only five hours by air. As I view the problem, operations in the South Atlantic would necessitate the use of Brazilian bases, particularly the port of Para at the mouth of the Amazon; and, in any case, will be greatly facilitated when the Trinidad and Guiana bases are ready.

My conclusions: unstinted billions to aid Britain now, or untold billions later, in a probably futile attempt to outstrip the Triplice in a naval building race. The former policy, by helping to beat the Axis, will keep America at peace; the latter will not prevent war. At the very least, aid to Britain will give the United States time to build its two-ocean navy, and to complete its naval defenses in the Pacific Atlantic, and the Caribbean, so that America will have a favorable strategical position. Time is needed to complete the two drydocks building at Pearl Harbor, advanced naval and air bases at Samoa, Johnston, Wake, and Midway Islands, and an air and naval station at Dutch Harbor in the Aleutians.

Gibraltar of The Pacific

We should convert Guam into the "Gibraltar of the Pacific," as Mahan and the best naval opinion have urged. At long last, a start is about to be made. The defenses of Panama are being strengthened and the facilities of St. Thomas extended. We need, as the barest minimum, three years to prepare the new bases in the Atlantic and Caribbean. Some deal must be made with Brazil which will permit the United States to use its ports in time of war. None of its ports can, in their present condition, be used by America's largest ships, and it would take several years to prepare the necessary bases.

And should Britain be on the verge of collapse, it would be good policy to beat the Axis to it by grabbing outposts in the Portuguese Cape Verdes and the Azores. From such bases the United States could keep a watchful eye on the routes from Europe to the Caribbean and South America, carry the war to a hostile European coalition, if necessary, and make considerable trouble even for a superior fleet. Indeed, secret negotiations with Portugal for American footholds in the Azores, Cape Verdes, and Madeira Islands have already been reported. But we could hold such advanced positions only if we had naval control of the Atlantic.

Wonderful

A cameraman, working for the educational department of a film company, met an old farmer coming out of a house. "I have just been taking some moving pictures of life on your farm."

"Did you catch any of my laborers in motion?" asked the old man, curiously.

"Sure I did."

The farmer shook his head reflectively, then said: "Science is a wonderful thing."—Exchange.

SOLONS ARE AHEAD IN Y.C.A.C. TOURNEY

Ancient Mariners Manage to Nose Out Cardinals in Hard Fought Game Sunday

The Solons gained the leadership of the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club mixed softball league by virtue of a close 9 to 7 victory over the Pirates on the club field Saturday afternoon. The Ancient Mariners just managed to nose out the Cardinals in another hard fought game Sunday afternoon, winning by 14 to 13 in a contest which required an extra inning to decide.

The league standing shows the Solons out in front with two victories and no defeats, while the Pirates and Ancient Mariners are tied for second place with one win and one loss apiece. The Cardinals grace the cellar with no victories and two defeats.

Solons Pick Up Lead

In Saturday's tilt the Solons scored five runs in the first canto and two more in the second to gain a commanding lead which the Pirates gradually cut down as the game progressed, but they were still two down at the end. On Sunday the Ancient Mariners were leading by 12 to 7 as the ninth inning opened and it looked as if the game was in the bag but four errors and a couple of hits tied the count. The Cardinals scored once in the tenth frame but their opponents got two in their half to decide the issue.

It is rumored that the Solons lived up to their name of being wise and had the game almost won before it started. The reports are that one of the fair members of the Solons had refreshments with one of the opposition prior to the contest. While she partook of ginger ale the other imbibed ginger ale plus, and it is said that this bit of strategy was most successful.

The Pirates' pitcher was full of pep as the game got under way but he issued three walks and was nicked for as many hits, which resulted in five Solons crossing the plate. Two bases on balls and another three hits in the second saw the winners ahead by 7 to 0, but the Pirates managed to get one run in their half of the same canto.

The Pirates then settled down and blanked the Solons in the next two innings while they got two in the third and one in the fourth to make the score 7 to 4. One of the highlights of the game occurred in the third when Captain "Bucky" Harriss of the Pirates struck out Ray Devin, skipper of the Solons, with the bases loaded and two out. Devin squared the account in the fifth frame when he sent Harriss down swinging.

Run in Fifth

The Solons got a run in the fifth but the Pirates again reduced the deficit to three in the sixth. Neither side could count in the seventh but the winners got one man home in the eighth and their opponents added two to their total and the score became 9 to 7.

After the Solons were retired without a run in the ninth the Pirates made a good start in their last stand. Johnny da Silva got a hit and Juliet Darbier obtained a free ticket to first to make things promising for the Pirates. However, the Solons' defense tightened at this stage and retired the opponents without a run.

The girls contributed considerably to the Solons' victory, Maria Prohaska getting three hits and Mary Stevens obtaining two. Serge Bielous had a perfect day at bat, getting three safeties in as many times at bat, while Ray Devin also got three bingles. For the Pirates, both Ernest Eastlake and Johnny da Silva got two hits.

In Sunday's game the Cardinals got two runs in the first inning but the Ancient Mariners came right back in their half and made five to gain the lead. Neither side scored in the second and third cantos, but in the fourth the Cards made two and their opponents got one to bring the count to 6-4. The losers tied the score in the fifth but the winners staged another batting spree in the sixth to bring in four more runs, making the score 10 to 6.

With the Cards getting a point in the eighth and the Mariners obtaining two, the scoreboard read 12 to 7 when the former came to bat in the ninth. That five-run lead looked more than enough, but the Mariners went to pieces. With the other three club squads taking the names of American major league teams, the Ancient Mariners should have been called the Dodgers. However, Brooklyn at its worst could never have been as bad as the Mariners were in that almost fatal ninth.

Then Fun Started

The first batter grounded out to the pitcher and it looked all over but the shouting. And then the fun started for the Cardinals and the spectators but certainly not for the Mariners. Three errors in succession brought in two runs. A hit by Chita da Costa brought in one more. When the next batter struck out the Mariners started breathing a bit easier, but not for long. Two hits and another error brought in two more runs and the count was tied again. The merry-go-round was stopped however when the next batter grounded out. The Ancient Mariners certainly lived up to their name when they came to bat in the latter half of the ninth. They were staggering, mentally at least, from the unexpected reversal, and were all at sea. The Cardinals retired them in short order to send the game into extra innings.

Two hits and an error gave the Cardinals a one run advantage as the first half of the tenth inning ended, and that margin looked pretty good considering the condition the Mariners were in. But the latter, like the Dodgers of Brooklyn, pulled off the unexpected again. This time it was to the Cardinals disadvantage, and it would not be surprising if the Mariners choose for their team motto the old adage that he who laughs last laughs best.

"Lefty" Beatty came through with a single and scored the tying run on Herbie Schoene's three-bagger. Then Betty Russell won the ball game for the Mariners by grounding to first, Schoene crossing the plate on the play.

Besides bringing in the winning run Betty Russell made a good catch in centerfield which resulted in a double play. "Abie" Russell, playing for the Cardinals, thinking his wife would miss the ball started from first for second. On making the catch Mrs. Russell threw to Percy Lord, who relayed the ball to Schoene to double her husband off first.

Joe da Costa and Beatty both got a home run as well as three hits apiece, while Schoene also connected for three safeties. For the Cardinals, Chris Fernandes and Russell both got three hits, while Captain Pete Kipp made two.

NEW HOME IS READY FOR KONOYE LIBRARY

Buildings to House Rare Books, Documents of Yomei Bunko Completed in Kyoto

The buildings for the famous Yomei Bunko, library of the hereditary documentary property of the Konoye family, including classical literature, ancient documents and calligraphies, were recently completed in Uenotanicho, Utano, Ukyo-ku, Kyoto, a spot dear to the history of this prominent family. Like the Higashiyama Bunko of the Kyoto Palace, the Yomei Bunko has been known as one of the most outstanding ancient documentary libraries in this country.

The Yomei Bunko, formerly the private property of the Konoye family, was made a foundational juridical person just a year ago with Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye as its president, former Education Minister Kakichi Kawarada as the chairman and Nakasaburo Ogino as head librarian.

The first library building was completed in April last year, while the second was finished just recently. With the completion of the buildings, approximately 100,000 books and documents hitherto entrusted to the libraries of the Imperial Household Ministry and the Kyoto Imperial University will be brought to the new premises.

A one-floor structure, the first building covers a total floor space of 30 tsubo, while the second is a two-story building of 73 tsubo. Modelled after the ancient architecture of this country, both buildings are thatched roof Japanese style houses. The frames of the structures being ferro-concrete, however, they are fire and quake proof.

Commemorating the completion of the library buildings, ceremonies will be held on May 15 at the new premises, with the attendance of Premier Prince Konoye and other prominent personages, following which a public exhibition of books and documents belonging to the Yomei Bunko, never made public before, will be held for three days, between May 16 and 18.

Among the rare books for exhibition are the Diary of the Premier by Michinaga Fujiwara, Premier of the Kyoto Imperial Government and one of the most celebrated ancestors of Prince Konoye, more than 1,000 years ago, autographed letters of the Emperors Gosuzaku, Gotoba and Hanazono, and many other valuable documents handed down from generation to generation.

Hitler Tells Reich Of German Success

for all times certainly means disappearance of tension in entire Europe. Such an important waterway as the Danube is thus safeguarded for all the future against further acts of sabotage. The traffic has been fully resumed in the meantime. The German Reich has no particular territorial interests in this area besides modest corrections on its borders which were violated accordingly at the end of the World War. Politically, we are merely interested in safeguarding peace in this area, economically we are interested in bringing about order which will re-introduce the exchange of goods and enable production of these for the benefit of all concerned. It is, however, merely in the sense of higher justice if also those interests will be taken into consideration which are founded in historic or also economic conditions. Germany, however, is merely interested as a spectator as far as this development is concerned. We welcome that our allies are now able to satisfy their just national and political ambitions. We gladly welcome the creation of an independent Croat state with which we hope to co-operate in friendship and confidence for all times. We likewise view with cordial sympathy that the Hungarian people can take a further step in the revision of unjust peace treaties forced on them. And we are particularly moved to see that the injustice done to the Bulgarian people one time is now being repaired, and that Italy, allied to us receives territorial and political influence in the living realm to which it is entitled and which it has more than deserved by the extremely great burden of blood which it had to bear since October of past year for the future of the Axis.

Sympathy for Greece

We are filled with sincere pity for the defeated unfortunate Greek people. It is a victim of its King and of a small blinded group of leaders. But it fought so bravely that the respect of its enemies cannot be denied it. The Serbian people, however, will perhaps some day draw the conclusion from their catastrophe that revolting officers are a danger also to that country.

If we survey this campaign, we once again, become conscious of the importance of the best training of soldiers and also of the best equipment. So much blood has been spared because so much sweat was first sacrificed. With a minimum of blood a maximum of effect was achieved thanks to this training, thanks to the capabilities of the German soldier and his leaders. But a minimum of sacrifice demands also a maximum of weapons, of the quality of these weapons, of the ammunition and of the quality of this ammunition. I do not belong to those persons who see in war only a material problem. For material is dead and men alone give it impulse. But even the best soldier must fail if bad or insufficient weapons are placed in his hands. The life of many of our sons therefore is in the hands of the home. Their sweat too can spare blood. It is therefore the highest duty of the German people in view of the fighting in the front to do everything to give it the weapons that are needed.

Women's Contribution

I believe that in this, the German girl and German woman above all can make an additional contribution. For millions of German women in rural districts in the fields must under hardest labor replace men. Millions of German women and girls are working in factories, workshops, offices, doing their duty also there. It is not unjust if we demand that these millions of working women be taken as an example by many additional hundreds and thousands. The German nation will never again experience a year like 1918 but will rise to ever greater achievements in all fields of national resistance. It will therefore maintain superiority in its armament and under no circumstances will let the headstart it has gained be reduced. If the German soldier already today has the best weapons of the world then he will get even better ones this year and in the coming year. We are therefore obliged to harness the labor power of the entire nation to this most gigantic armament process in history. The measures necessary to achieve this will be taken with National Socialist determination and thoroughness.

For the rest, I can assure you that I am looking to the future with the greatest tranquility and confidence. The German Reich and its allies represent militarily, economically and above all morally a force which is superior to any combine imaginable in the world. The German forces will act wherever and whenever necessary. The year 1941 shall go down in history as the greatest year of our rise. In this spirt the German armed forces, army, navy, and airforce will fulfill their highest duty. In this country a spirit has sprung up which hitherto the world has not been able to conquer! A common faith inspires our people! What we have gained for ourselves in a long internal strife and of what we are so proud when facing other nations, no power in the world will ever again wrest from us. In the Jewish capitalist era, obsessed by the lure of gold, class and caste, the national socialist people stand out like a solid monument of social justice and reason. It will survive not only this war but thousands of years to come!

WHIRLAWAY WINS U.S. DERBY CLASSIC

Marketwise Comes in Third at America's Famous Race Held in Kentucky

Domei

LOUISVILLE, May 5.—Whirlaway and Staretor, two "dark horses" flashed under the wire today, first and second respectively in America's racing classic, the Kentucky Derby.

Marketwise ran third and Porter's Cap, favorite, and West's hope for the first California winner, was fourth.

Open Race Predicted

I.N.S.

NEW YORK, April 30.—Differing sharply from last year's Kentucky Derby when Bimelech was 40 cents to a dollar, the 1941 edition of the famed Churchill Downs classic today seems to be destined to be staged without an outstanding favorite. Briefly, the Blue Grass Classic looms as a wide open race.

Thus far the only line obtained on any of the current candidates comes from the winter three-year-old specials, namely, the Flamingo Stakes and the Santa Anita Derby.

King Ranch's Dispose won the Flamingo at Haialeah Park, and suddenly was boosted high up the ladder of Derby appraisal and even was spoken of as the "probable" favorite. But considering the way he was hard pressed to come in ahead of Coldstream Stable's Curious Coin it would be misleading to pin the label of positive favoritism on him.

By the same token, Curious Coin who came so close to Flamingo victory, might be said to enjoy almost equal status.

These two will undoubtedly be the objects of strong support on Derby day with the King Ranch representative probably being fancied at the odds of about 4 to 1 and Curious Coin in the neighborhood of 6 to 1.

Charles S. Howard's Porter's Cap took California's three-year old special, the Santa Anita Derby. He won the race by four lengths, and immediately was tabbed a leading Kentucky Derby prospect.

Impression Lasting

While Porter's Cap finished unplaced in the sucsequent Santa Anita Handicap against older horses, he did show a flash of early speed and thus did not materially dull the earlier impression of him.

He might be an 8 to 1 shot in the Louisiville event while Mrs. Anthony Pelleteri's Bull Reigh, which chased home the Howard colt in the Santa Anita Derby, stands to rate about 15 to 1.

Whirlaway, last year's juvenile leader and something of a disappointment this season, still is not ruled out by the wary ones. In fact, the Calumet Farm colorbearer may go postward at 12 to 1. Whirlaway's greatest rival of 1940, Woodvale Farm's Our Boots, spared a winter campaign, looks like an 8 to 1 prospect.

Mrs. L. Palladino's Little Beans, upsetter of Whirlaway in an overnight race at Tropical Park last March 22, took on greater potentialities with that performance and might stand in the vicinity of 10 to 1 in the Derby.

Wheatley Stable's Bold Irishman, regarded in many quarters as a good thing, also looks like 10 to 1.

C. C. Van Meter's Blue Pair, New England sensation last year, appears a 12 to 1 early prospect among the band of possible starters. Arnold Hanger's duel of Big Stakes and Harvard Square bear earmarks of 15 to 1 shots.

Equipoise Colt Liked

Attention, a son of Equipoise which races for Mrs. Parker Corning, is well liked and has a prospective 12 to 1 chance, while Bern Stable's fleet Master Henry also seems to rate around that figure.

Horses such as Ogden Phipps' King Cole and Victor Emanuel's Omission fall in about the same category as the previous two.

Fanning out from that point to be offered at even fancier figures are candidates like John R. Macomber's Red Vulcan, H. L. Myer's Sheriff Culkin Shady Brook Farm's Agricole, Valdina Farm's Valdina Groom, Herbert M. Woolf's Signator, and Breckinridge Long's Nasca.

The last of these, a filly, could be rated a 50 to 1 shot while the others can be roundly classified in the 30 to 1 range.

With the Derby so wide open this year, many players will be angling for dark horses with the result that figures may be thrown strangely out of line by the time the field goes to the post. Hence no early odds could be gauged with any hope of accuracy. The only thing that appears certain about the race is that any horse could win.

FOOCHOW RICE DISTRIBUTED

1,800,000 Pounds Received at Half of Former Price

Domei

FOOCHOW, May 6.—A total of 1,800,000 pounds of rice was distributed by the Japanese forces which made a triumphant entry into this city among the citizens through the local Peace Preservation Committee at half the price which prevailed before the Japanese entry.

To relieve a severe shortage of rice and its subsequent high price, Japanese troops have first of all decided to give a large quantity of rice to the Chinese, and as the first group of ships carrying 1,800,000 pounds of rice arrived at this port from Canton district yesterday, the Japanese authorities at once distributed it at such a low price.

CIVIL SERVICE STUDY WILL BE ORGANIZED

Commission Will Be Composed Of Members of Cabinet and Privy Council

Creation of a civil service inquiry commission under the chairmanship of the Premier was decided on at the regular session of the Cabinet on Tuesday morning.

The commission, composed of Cabinet Ministers and members of the Privy Council, will hold its first meeting on May 16.

The move marks a further step toward the construction of the new official structure with which the Government is proceeding as part of the program of establishing a high degree national defense State. The proposed commission bears relations to the conference to which the Cabinet has invited 16 persons, representatives of financial circles, on May 10 for the discussion of the policy to be pursued in realizing the new official structure.

The organization of the new civil service inquiry commission will follow the lines which were fixed at a meeting on Monday among Kenji Tomita, Chief Secretary of the Cabinet, Naokai Murase, Director of the Legislative Bureau, Dr. Nobumi Ito, President of the Board of Information, and Lieutenant General Teiichi Suzuki, President of the Planning Board.

Members Are Named

The Government members of the commission which will be presided over by Premier Fumimaro Konoye will be Home Minister Kiichiro Hiranuma, Justice Minister Heisuke Yanagawa, Agriculture and Forestry Minister Tadaatsu Ishiguro, Finance Minister Isao Kawada, Masatsune Ogura, Minister without Portfolio, and President Teiichi Suzuki of the Planning Board.

The Privy Council will be represented on the commission by Hiroshi Ieon, former Communications Minister and Governor General of Taiwan, and Dr. Heiji Futakami, former Chief Secretary of the Cabinet.

The commission will have a secretariat which will comprise Mr. Tomita, Chief Cabinet Secretary, Director Mrsase of the Legislative Bureau and President Ito of the Board of Information.

An arrangement has been made by which an investigation committee will be created in the commission whenever necessity arises. Care will be taken in ensuring that there will be clear reflection of popular sentiment in utterances by persons who sit on these committees.

The civil service inquiry commission will keep in close touch with the progress of discussions on the construction of the new official structure, and developments in the discussion of this question will be a factor in the determination of the time for the convocation of the commission.

Matters of Attention

The principal matters which will receive the attention of the commission include improvement of efficiency in the dispatch of business of Government offices, training of Government officials, improvement of the working conditions of Government officials, and promotion of liaison among Government offices.

In the meantime, financial circles are pushing preparations for the round-table conference between financial leaders and Cabinet members which has been called for the afternoon or May 10 at the Premier's official residence for discussing of the Government's program of constructing a new official structure.

The 16 representatives of financial circles who have been invited to the meeting are holding consultations with various financial organizations with regard to the policy to be followed by them in the coming meeting with Government leaders. They are expected to ponder deeply the statement on the subject of the projected new official structure the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce and Industry forwarded to the Government after a meeting of its directors held at noon on Tuesday.

May Make Changes

The statement stressed the need of reorganizing various Government institutions if the construction of a high degree national defense state, essential to the realization of the Greater East Asia Mutual Prosperity Sphere, is to be consummated. The situation, it said, has reached a phase in which it is absolutely necessary to realize the firm establishment of a new economic structure supported by civilians fired to service with the state and to achieve a new official structure aiming at the adjustment of the administrative machinery and reform of the system of Government officials.

The statement warned that the administrative machinery and system of officials have been reformed partially and that perfunctorily will not help much to achieve the great national ideal in the face of obstacles at home and abroad.

The statement ended with an appeal to the Government to give thought to concrete plans for the construction of a new official structure presented by the chamber to the Government on February 6 of this year and to see that the coming round-table conference of representatives of the Government and financial circles is an occasion for action toward fundamental revision of the administrative machinery and official system.

Regular Cabinet Council

The regular Cabinet council was held at 10:20 a.m. Tuesday.

At the outset Premier Konoye explained the plan for the creation of a civil service inquiry commission prepared by the four Cabinet bureau directors, which was approved.

President Suzuki of the Planning Board followed with a report on the projected reform of the Council of National General Mobilization, which also was adopted.

Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka made a detailed report on the latest developments in the diplomatic situation.

A feature of the reformed Council of National General Mobilization is the creation of a standing committee in the council. The committee, which will be made up of members outside the Government, will maintain liaison between the council and the Government.

Another feature is the arrangement for limiting the term of membership to two years.

There Is No Deceiving in Report, Says Byrd Asking Deception Bay Base

I.N.S.

NEW YORK, May 5.—That both the Germans and the Japanese have already shown an interest in Deception Bay in Antarctica is stated by members of the Byrd expedition which is arriving at Boston after 18 months of Antarctic exploration.

Deception Bay is recommended by Rear-Admiral Richard Byrd as a United States naval base.

It is stated that Deception Bay was one of the bases used by the Graf Spee prior to the operations which culminated in its destruction at Montevideo. The Germans are also reported to have erected buildings at Little America which a British landing party destroyed.

In pointing out the importance of Antarctica in connection with the defense of the Western Hemisphere, Admiral Byrd said, "if the Panama Canal is destroyed—and it can be—the only way to get our fleet from the Atlantic to the Pacific and vice versa would be through Deception Bay at Parlad Peninsula. The bay is only 500 miles south of South America and a base could be established there and unlimited supplies stored there."

It is understood that Admiral Byrd's report has greatly impressed the Navy Department which is giving immediate study to it and interviewing the members of the expedition.

AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY COOPERATION PLANNED

Tripartite Agreement Concluded Among Italy, Germany, France

D.N.B.

PARIS, May 6.—The conclusion of a tripartite agreement between Germany Italy and France for the creation of a "provisional committee for the cooperation of the European motorcar industry" having its seat in Berlin was announced by Paris papers. The agreement was signed in Berlin, and the committee consists of five representatives of each of the three countries.

The paper L'Auto states that the agreement provides for a cooperation on the basis of parity of rights of the three countries concerned. These countries will pool their experiences but they will on the other hand continue to develop their respective industries separately from one another.

The paper Petit Parisien published an interview with the Chairman of the Committee of the French automobile industry, Francois Lehideux, who signed the agreement on behalf of France. Lehideux pointed out that a consequence of this agreement will be the securing of the economic existence of 800,000 French families dependent on the automobile industry. The first meeting of the provisional committee will take place in Paris on June 5. The paper describes the agreement as eminently satisfactory and as a full promise for future Franco-German cooperation.

NISEI LIFE IN U. S. HAPPY, SAYS WRITER

Defense Preparations Have Given Them More Jobs, But Some Discrimination Felt

The hostile American attitude toward the Axis Powers is causing some suffering to the second generation American citizens of Japanese parentage, but in economic fields, the effect of the huge war preparation budget as well as the program for aiding Britain are benefiting them, says Masao Dodo, in the May issue of the Kaizo, one of the leading monthly magazines.

The life of the second generation is very bright. They are born of the noble Japanese blood and reared in the United States. From their birth they went through various trials. There are in Pacific coast States 90,000 second generation, 120,000 in Hawaii, and 10,000 scattered in other districts. The age distribution is such that those of 18 years old number the largest with 30,000. They were born just in the period when the so-called "picture brides" came to the United States. Their mothers coming to the United States to marry unknown husbands naturally were qualified to bear oppressions and sufferings.

Have Good Inheritance

The second generation inherited this good nature of their mothers, and that is revealed in their sports. In the sixteen counties of Southern California there are 50 to 150 football, basketball, and baseball teams, and the second generation are participating in them. The annual meet of the second generation athletic league is almost a Olympic game. There are branches of the Kodokan and the Butokukai. More then two hundred Nisei are grade men in Judo.

Then in the Pacific States most of the large high schools or colleges that have second generation students. There are 200 Japanese language schools in Southern California, with 10,000 students, and when those in Hawaii are added, language schools will total 500 with 60,000 students. The Japanese language study is a great burden on the second generation, but the language is essential in effecting good understanding between parents and children. It also serves in providing them with a recreation atmosphere to supplement their unsound social condition. In Southern California there are 400 second generation social organizations and most of them have grown from language schools and religious bodies. That the second generation forms a separate community from Americans may incur the criticism that it will augment racial isolation. But as Americans do not provide them with many social facilities, they sometimes establish their own institutions.

Active in Politics

They are also active in political fields, and formed the Japanese Parentage American Citizens' Association. There are seven daily Japanese newspapers published, and they all have English pages; the papers are edited by the second generation and also are the organ for their opinions.

The second generation is no longer young. Of about 100,000 in the Mainland, 32,000 have votes, and in four years the number will increase to 65,000. This third generation now reaches 1,800 in Southern California only. In economic activities the second generation are gradually establishing themselves.

Today, the life of the second generation is bright and hopeful, but yet in the past they went through a long struggle. Then if ever there were to arise a crisis between Japan and the United States, it is not known what fate would await them. The second generation in Hawaii did not have such experience, but their future is unknown. The peace or war in the Pacific will decide the political and economic life of the Hawaii second generation.

Since the Manchurian incident, the second generation have become speakers for Japan. Their racial sentiment has been strongly aroused, and they tried to explain Japan's stand to Americans. Besides the oppression by Americans, obstacles placed in the path of Nisei are the emigrant psychology of the first generation and the desire of the first generation to send back their children to Japan. The first generation desired to make some money quickly and return home, and they remitted their earnings home, thus greatly lowering the economic status of the second generation. Then the first generation thinks that the second generation should make their names and fortunes in Japan. These ideas of the first generation are handicapping the second generation.

The hostile American attitude toward the Axis Powers is causing extreme suffering to the second generation, but in economic fields, the huge war preparation budget of the United State and also the program of aiding Britain are benefiting them. Will they use their profits for constructive works?

Often at the graduation ceremony of high schools and junior high schools, the second generation makes addresses representing the graduating classes. That surprises many Americans, but it is due to their eager study of American conditions and institutions. What American students accept as something quite natural, they investigate throughly and thus are able to obtain deeper conceptions. They are also benefitted much from their experiences they had in contact with Americans.

FOREMEN'S RECORDS WILL BE RECOGNIZED

54 Factory Men to Be Decorated for Good Conduct and Long Years of Service

Among 54 factory foremen to be decorated for exemplary conduct and past record of service by the Foremen Education Superintendence Association at Kyoritsu Auditorium on May 17, is Suetaro Shinogi of the Kawasaki Motor Factory in Kanagawa Prefecture, who raised himself from a mere factory-hand during the past 44 years of hard work, says the Asahi.

Certificates of decoration will be awarded by General Ayao Kishimoto, president of the Foremen Education Superintendence Association, on the occasion. The ceremony will be followed by lectures and informal discussion. During a three-day-period from May 18, the 54 decorated foremen will visit the Naval Arsenal at Yokosuka to inspect work within the jurisdiction of foremen.

A native of Kokura, Fukuoka Prefecture, Mr. Shinogi is a senior of factory foremen and has lived with engines for the past 44 years. He related his past experiences in an interview with the Asahi as follows:

"I was born the third son of a farmer. As I took interest in boilers during my boyhood days, I entered as an apprentice the Kokura factory of the Kyushu Railways at the age of 15, in 1899. I was put to mending machines there. Ten years later, I came to Tokyo where I found work at a machinery factory at Tsukishima. I studied machinery with second-hand books, which I bought, during my spare hours and at nights.

"I shall never forget the moment when I succeeded in fixing an electric motor on a pump manufactured at our factory, when no one else was able to do so. I was able to move the motor by studying a second-hand book called Essentials of Electricity three successive nights without sleeping. As I believed that there would be a future for gasoline motors, I entered the Mita factory of the Ikegai Iron Works about five years later. I had a difficult time there, where gasoline motors were being manufactured, as I only had a primary school education.

"Japan-made motors were exported abroad for the first time when 500 motors were exported by our company to Russia in 1916. I can still recollect that proud occasion. I believe there were only two factory-hands who had any knowledge of airplane motors at the Naval Arsenal at Yokosuka at that time. Using my spare hours at the factory, I always went over to the arsenal and studied how work was beng carried on there. In 1920, I succeeded in inventing an igniter to be attached to an internal combustion engine which was imported from Germany about half a year later. I was surprised at the improvements in the imported German engines. Although I feel rather bashful to think that I shall be decorated for my past record, I intend to further concentrate my efforts on my work at the factory in the future."

A chief inspector at the factory where Mr. Shinogi is employed said: "Mr. Shinogi is an example of that there is nothing which cannot be achieved if one tries hard enough. It is an honor to our factory and company that he should be decorated. In spite of his 59 years of age, his energy and strength surpass those of younger men at the factory. We are trying our best in our work with the example of Mr. Shinogi before us."

It is understood that the Yoshimoto Entertainment Enterprise also is planning to take over some theaters in Shanghai and Masanosuke Hayashi, managing director, has departed for China recently. In addition, the Shochiku Theatrical Company will shortly send Kichizo Chiba, chief of the motion picture department in the Kansai office, to Shanghai. It is thought that the chief aim of their visit to the international city in China will center on the effort for obtaining theaters under their direction.

DUTCH VEGETABLES GO INTO GERMANY

The Netherlands Exporters Now Deal Directly With Nazi Importers

D.N.B.

BERLIN, May 7.—Before the war, considerable quantities of Dutch vegetables were wasted annually, because neither the European buying markets nor Great Britain nor the overseas could or would take the Dutch surplus production. The outlet of this surplus production presents no longer any difficulties now that the markets of Greater Germany are open to the Dutch market gardening produce and German demand have increased.

During the weeks immediately following the close of hostilities, the imports of Dutch vegetables were arranged on the Dutch side by the leading organization of market gardening, the Dutch Vegetable and Fruit Central Office, acting for the Dutch exporter, and on the German side as importer by several collective receiving offices, for instance at Duesseldorf, Berlin, etc.

With the increasing normalization of trade with Holland, this provisional agreement was given up, and since late summer of last year imports have been carried on again directly and exclusively between the Dutch exporters and the German importers. The system of a completely free press of the liberalistic era, as personified by the auction prices of Veilings, was naturally given up when war economic measures were adopted. The Dutch price commissioner also regulates the prices of vegetables, whether for home consumption or for export. In arranging export prices for Germany, competent German authorities were consulted in an advisory capacity. Fixed prices were set only in the cases of onions, for there is a fixed price established in Germany. The other prices—inland as well as export—are more or less confined within a certain set limit, freedom of movement being possible within these limits.

The transposition of Dutch market gardening from the free world market to a unified war economy has not, as one might have supposed, made Veilings superfluous or weakened its importance. On the contrary, its position has been strengthened. Veilings has become distributional headquarters, necessary under the regime of a controlled market.

Onions head the list of Dutch vegetable exports, at least as far as quantity is concerned. Money realized on tomato exports amounted to rather more, even though quantitatively they did not amount, for the most part, to even half that of the onion exports. Conditions for growing hothouse produce have become more unfavorable than those to outdoor produce because of the increasing wage tendency and the price control.

HIRANUMA SPONSORS CLASSICS RESEARCH

30 Teachers Enjoying Free Course at Night in Library of Home Minister

Every night in the library on the premises of Home Minister Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma's residence in Yodobashi, some 30 teachers are engaged in research in Japanese and Chinese classics. They were selected by Baron Hiranuma to pursue studies concerning the fundamental character of the Japanese Empire.

Baron Hiranuma, the Nichi Nichi explains, has been anxious to preserve works on the unique national polity of Japan. The course was started a few days ago by the Home Minister and others keenly interested in his enterprise. Lectures are given free by the best authorities on the classics. The students are given free use of the books in the library. The library is named "Mukyuh" or Everlasting, signifying the everlastingness of the Japanese Empire.

The students are scheduled to study three hours every night.

The students were selected from among the teachers of the preparatory departments of Waseda University, military cadets schools, Nishogakusha college, Daito-Bunka college, First Municipal Middle School of Tokyo, Kaisei Middle School and Nippon Middle School. All are teaching in their schools in the daytime.

Hiranuma Is Director

The faculty comprises Baron Hiranuma as director, Professor Yasukuni Matsudaira of Waseda University, Takatane Kokubu of Imperial Art Institute, Masuzo Yoshida of the Imperial Household Ministry, Professor Teranosuke Kato of Musashi High School, Teisuke Imaizumi, Professor Ariyoshi Saegi, Mizuho Kawada of Waseda University, Hiroshi Matsumoto of Waseda University and Professor Kenchi Uyeno of Musashi High School.

Among the sujects on which lectures are given are the Kojiki (Records of Ancient Things) and other ancient Japanese classics; authentic Chinese classics such as the Books of Shu, consisting of Great Learning, Analects of Confucius, Book of the Mean and Book of Mencius, and the Five Ching made up of Book of Odes, Book of History, Book of Changes, Book of Ceremonies and Spring and Autumn Records; the Japanese language and the ancient Chinese language.

Baron Hiranuma started his collection of Japanese and Chinese classics around 1916 when he was Procurator-General. He organized the "Mukyuh" or Everlasting Society comprising himself and friends including ex-Ambassador Satsuo Akizuki, Dr. Kenzo Niki, the late Supreme Court Judge Yoshimasu Kawamura, the late Takaya Inouye and the late Shokaku Oda. The society was founded to save precious ancient books from being destroyed by fire or being dispersed abroad. Now the library, of the same name, on the premises of the Hiranuma residence, holds about 100,000 volumes, largely collected at the expenses of the Home Minister. Among the books are 20,000 from Baron Hiranuma's private possessions, 40,000 bought from the late Dr. Yorikuni Matsudaira, and 20,000 purchased from the late Mr. Oda.

Financiers Gave Help

The maintenance of this rare library seemed difficult a few years ago because it has been collected almost single-handed by the Home Minister, when financial leaders, including Seiuin Ikeda, Toyotaro Yuki, Kojuro Nakagawa, Kamesaburo Yamashita, Shingo Tauda and Masatsune Ogura, extended their support, with the result that the Everlasting Society was placed on a sound basis and its library was housed in the present building. These leaders are reported to have said their support was extended apart from any political considerations and simply for the future good of the nation.

The new classics research course marks success for Baron Hiranuma's 20 years of effort to disseminate enlightenment on the unique fundamental character of the Japanese Empire.

Baron Hiranuma was once given the suggestion that the library should be named after himself to commemorate his efforts in collecting the books, but he is said to have answered: "The Everlasting Library is for the study of the everlasting nature of our Empire. The name, if changed, would have no significance."

HEARST EXCORIATES CHURCHILL'S POLICY

U.S. Newspaper Publisher Sharply Analyzes Record of British Prime Minister

Transocean

NEW YORK, May 3.—One of the sharpest criticisms of the record of Prime Minister Winston Churchill in his conduct of the war appeared in the New York Journal-American today.

It was written by William Randolph Hearst, leading newspaper publisher.

How many more Polish, Danish, Norwegian catastrophies must be experienced? How aften will people be asked to countenance the leaving in the lurch of the Dutch, the Belgians, and the French? How frequently must retreats such as those from Greece and Jugoslavia be repeated? How many more times will there be evacuations such as those from Narvik, Dunkirk, and Pireaus, following which Britain's allies were left helpless in the hands of their enemies? Hearst asked.

He said that the American people must obtain an answer to these questions if they are to know to what extent they may depend upon Prime Minister Churchill's leadership in the event that the United States enters the war.

Hearst then analyzed Prime Minister Churchill's report on the Balkan campaign. If as Prime Minister Churchill claims, the British knew that their troops were insufficient for saving Greece, they ought to have told this to the Greeks instead of rushing to their vessels, letting the Greeks do the fighting with the inevitable end—capitulation.

When Jugoslavia "rose up spontaneously" on British and American promises, according to Prime Minister Churchill, there countries had already given up Jugoslavia for lost, Hearst pointed out.

Prime Minister Churchill's speech was above all a plea for allegiance to the "Churchill regime." It asked for consent for repetitions of Gallipoli and Dunkirk; that is to say to be content in the future also with a policy of too little and too late.

Prime Minister Churchill concluded his speech with a statement which means practically that the United States is almost certain to jump in to save Britain from its own mistakes and thus from complete catastrophe, the newspaper publisher continued.

He deduced from Prime Minister Churchill's speech that President Roosevelt has left the American public in the dark as to how far American assistance has been already pledged to Britain.

Then Hearst sharply criticized President Roosevelt for his attitude toward opposition leaders. For instance, Colonel Lindbergh's resignation was accepted when he declared that the Battle of the Atlantic has not yet been decided. Why does not the president reject Prime Minister Churchill since, in his latest speech, he has made identically the same statement? the publisher concluded.

SUMMER SUMO MEET IS NOW UNDER WAY

Opening Day Sees Packed House—Grand Champions Win —To Continue for 15 Days

Japan's most spectacular sport, professional sumo, had its opening day of the summer tourney Friday before a bulging bargain day crowd at the Kokugikan amphitheater in Ryogoku. The milling, noisy fans, filling every available seat and standing room, remained throughout the day witnessing the numerous bouts between the wrestlers of the East and West teams, captained by Minanogawa and Futabayama, respectively.

In some of the main bouts, Futabayama, popular grand champion defeated Ryuozan and Minanogawa, another "yokozuna" bowled over Katsuragawa. The West's only "ozeki" Haguroyama threw Sakuranishiki, while Akinoumi toppled Tatekabuto.

Youthful Terukuni, scored for the West by taking his bout against Jintozan, a "maegashira." The other "ozekis" of the East team, Itsutsushima and Maedayama scored victories, defeating Fujigatake and Aobayama, respectively.

This bigger and greater sumo tournament which is to continue for 15 days, opened with two positions newly added on both sides. Thus the East and West senior group was made up of 27 grapplers.

In the East group, no change was seen in the first five highest ranking men, namely, Minanogawa, Akinoumi, Maedayama, Itsutsushima and Hishuzan. Promoted to the "komusubi" was Kasagiyama, who showed so favorably in the "spring" tourney last January. Reinstated to his former position, "maegashira" was Kyushuzan who recently returned from the front.

In the West team, Nayoroiwa and Tamanoumi retained their former positions, "sekiwaki" and "komusubi," respectively. However, Asahikawa dropped from a "komusubi" to a "maegashira." The youthful Terukuni, who performed spectacularly in the last tournament holds a "sekiwake" position.

The remainder of the wrestlers newly ranked in the senior group were recruited from the "juryo" classification.

The leading wrestlers in the new rankings are as follows:

WALKING EVENT PLANNED BY MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT

Students Will Cover 10 Miles From Arakawa to Konodai On May 25

With the popular slogan, "The promotion of health is to go on foot," the Tokyo Municipal Government will hold a large scale walking contest on May 25, if weather permits, when a large number of students in the upper class of 100 national schools in Tokyo will participate in the event, this being the fourth foot-race sponsored by the city authorities, reports Domei.

Covering ten miles in distance, the course will be from Arakawa as the starting-point and Konddai in Chiba Prefecture as the goal. The youths representing their schools, will assemble at a plaza near the drain of the Arakawa River at Senju bridge in Adachi-ku at 8:30 a.m. on May 25.

After singing Kimigayo, the national anthem, bowing toward the Imperial Palace and standing for a silent tribute to soldiers at the front, the "go-on-foot" athletes will depart from the chalk-line at a signal of the judges. Those who succeed in tramping the course within three or three hours and a half will be awarded a Mayor Prize. The race is scheduled to be completed at 2 p.m. at Konodai and the forced-walking members will visit the army hospital there to comfort the wounded soldiers. The contest will be held on June 1 in case of wet weather on May 25.

BRITISH DIPLOMACY OFTEN LACKS FAITH

Arabia Is One Case in Point, While Other Nations Also Dealt Similar Blows

Observation that there is no faith in the present diplomacy is one view, while that faith is the only basic policy and honesty is the best principle, however force and intrigues may be popular, is another. The British bankruptcy today is not so much due to defeats in battles, but more to failures in diplomacy. Various reasons may be mentioned for the British diplomatic failure, but in a word it is the result of her reckless issue of unhonored notes. That is to say Britain is now reaping the fruit of her using two tongues, says Soho Tokutomi, veteran publicist in the Tokyo Nichi Nichi.

As one example, the relation between Britain and Arabia can be mentioned. At the time of the last world war Britain appeased Arabia, and for that end Colonel Lawrence worked hard at the very risk of his life. He spoke the Arabian language, ate Arabian food, dressed in Arabian clothes, and lived as an Arabian. He pacified Arabians, himself becoming an Arabian, and promised them an opportunity to regain their former prosperity and glory. Then when the time came for Britain to keep that promise, it forgot it entirely, and furthermore treated Arabians as though they were a nuisance.

Once, when King George was to reward those who had given meritorious service to the Empire, he called them to the Palace. They received their new decorations and honors one by one, proceeding to the presence of the King. Colonel Lawrence's turn came, and the King opened a box and taking out the decoration of the Order of Bath, proceeded to confer it on the Colonel. But Colonel Lawrence knelt down in front of the King and in a low voice said that though he appreciated the high honor, he would refuse to accept it until the time when Britain would fulfil her promise given to Arabians. The King was surprised and became angry and put the decoration back in its box. Colonel Lawrence saluted the King and retired. This story is written by the present British Premier Winston Churchill. Also, it is said that Colonel Lawrence refused the decoration at a private audience given previously. At any rate, the story tells how Britain herself made the position of Colonel Lawrence difficult.

The British people boast of their honesty to the whole world. But they believe that honest men can say anything and do any act if there is a good excuse for it. When British forces were retreating from Greece in the recent Balkan war, the British Government explained at the Parliament that British troops were withdrawn because they were requested by Greeks to do so.

Thus, the British are in a tight fix of being bound by her own ropes, as they used flattering words everywhere to everybody.

Whatever others may do, the Japanese people must respect faith and fidelity, carry out what is promised, and execute what is said, according to the original sense of morality of the country, just as goes the common saying, "Bushi's words are harder to break than metals."

Nakamura of Home Links Is in Favorite Position

Forty of Japan's champion golf players, professional and amateur on equal terms, compete today in the final round of the Japan open to determine the title for the Empire. Only three amateurs qualified in the 36-hole qualifying round which closed Friday afternoon, with one Tokyo amateur bidding.

The decided policy governing the proposed reorganization of the Price Commission is also aimed at re-setting the Commission into a powerful consultative and cooperative organ for the administration of the future price policies of the State. The decision includes the following points:

1. Policy: Matters especially important in connection with the price measures concern (a) establishment of synthetic price measures in relation to the production, distribution, consumption of goods, demand and supply of capital and labor, transportation facilities and various other economic branches, (b) coordination and adjustment of administration of different offices of the Government relative to the enforcement of the price measures and (c) fuller utilization of civilian knowledge and experience in conection with the formulation and operation of the price measures and also organized cooperation from all classes of the people.

Organs of the Government are responsible for the attainment of the aforementioned policies and therefore, the Government would take more positive steps toward the solution of those questions. At the same time, the Government would perfect the structure of the civilian organ in connection with (c), so that the price measures may be operated rigidly and perfectly.

Planning Board Structure

2. Strengthening of the Government Organ:

The structure of the Cabinet Planning Board which functions to formulate synthetic price measures and to coordinate and adjust the affairs of different offices of the Government regarding the enforcement of price measures, will be strengthened and expanded.

Closer liaison will be established between the executive department of the Planning Board and the competent departments and bureaus of different Ministries.

3. Utilization of Civilian Knowledge and Experience:

The committee system of the Planning Board will be utilized in such a way as to have civilians of knowledge and experience participate in study and formulation of price measures at the Planning Board.

If necessary, the Government will make arrangements to have the members of the existing price committees organize the committee of the Cabinet Planning Board.

The members of such a committee will be chosen from among well-qualified representatives of all classes of the people.

Powers Unchanged

3. Reorganization of Price Measures Inquiry Commission:

The powers of the Commission will remain unchanged as stipulated under its existing official organization, but the Commission will be operated as a cooperative and consultative organization of the civilian leaders. In line with this, the Government's inquiries to the commission hereafter will be more concrete in nature instead of general as in the case of past.

The Commission will have two vice-presidents, who will be appointed from among the Ministers of State.

The existing system under which the members of the Commission have hitherto been appointed from among the Ministers of States and three Chief Secretaries of the Cabinet will be abolished. Hereafter, the Cabinet will appoint the members of the Commission from among men of knowledge and experience only. The members will be nominated from among persons who occupy the leading positions in different sections of the country. The number of the members of the commission may be increased as circumstances warrant.

The existing provisions permitting the competent Ministers of States to attend and express their views at meetings of the Commission will be abolished.

Secretaries of the Commission will be chosen from among officials of the high ranks only.

Mr. Honda on China

The exclusive interview that Kumataro Honda, Japanese Ambassador to China, gave to the Tokyo Nichi Nichi at Shanghai on Friday as fully reported in this paper the next day, throws an illuminating light on Japan's China policy, which to no small extent requires to be restated in concrete terms. When Mr. Honda's trip back to Tokyo was announced last week, it was indicated that he was taking the trip on some important mission. This impression is now substantiated by what he has given out for public information.

Mr. Honda is one of the most stimulating intellects that our diplomatic service has produced. His expressions, if sometimes caustic, are always succinct and to the point. In discussing the China situation he shows that his keen mind has well grasped the ground he has been covering since his assumption of office.

One of the most important points he takes up is Chungking's attitude toward Japan, and in the course of the discussion he reveals a surprising, if not wholly unsuspected, fact. "If," he is quoted as saying, "there should be anybody who, from impatience, should approach Chungking for direct negotiation, he is a romantic fool."

"Direct negotiations with Chungking," Mr. Honda observes, "would not only have the result of unnecessarily prolonging the Incident but even strengthening the resistance front of the Chungking forces. This fact should be patent even to a three-year-old child. If anybody, because of illusionary hopes from Chungking, should fail to see the real importance of helping the Wang Ching-wei regime, he is committing a most serious error."

The implication is pretty obvious. Evidently there are or were "romantic fools." No age has been without them and this can be no exception. While we have no knowledge of their activities in China, our Ambassador must have seen that there are men foolish enough to believe that Chungking would lend an ear to Japan's peace overtures. Such an idea betrays ignorance matched only by naivete.

Direct negotiation with Chungking, as Mr. Honda points out, would be contrary to the letter and spirit of the treaty concluded with Nanking last year. "Besides," says Mr. Honda, "it is far too late to negotiate with Chungking. Chiang Kai-shek would entertain peace overtures only when they were made through America." Probably Japan missed a chance when it held itself disdainfully aloof from Chungking, saying that "it will have nothing to do with Chiang Kai-shek." But such reflections would do no good. The thought of peace entered few minds at the time, and even then it may be seriously questioned if any effective sort of peace was at all possible at any time.

The Sino-Japanese Basic Treaty that was concluded last November laid the foundation for the new relationship that was to be developed between Japan and China. Mr. Honda compares it to a blue print plan for the new Sino-Japanese relationship which is to be "the axis for the new East Asia order." "This plan," he remarks, "would amount only to a scrap of paper unless the structure was built with frames and cement from the foundation upward. The completion, with Japanese aid and support, of a great structure in the form of the revived National Government is the only course that Japan can take for the conclusion of the China Affair. This is the undertaking that should be attended to now, first and foremost. Those who talk of the future of the revived National Government without or before erecting the new structure on the present plan would only betray their failure to grasp the true method of concluding the China Affair. By the growth and development of the Wang Ching-wei regime alone would the conclusion of the China Affair be achieved. Of this I am firmly convinced."

Mr. Honda's attitude fully bears out the view we recently took in these columns regarding Japan's position toward the Nanking regime. Of the part that Japan played in creation of the new National Government there is no mystery. It marks the first milestone that Japan set up on the road to new peaceful construction in China. It was the first sign of peaceful augury that had emerged from the tragedy of war. It was the first expression of peace that the Japanese nation addressed to its neighbor nation. Japan could never betray its own policy or principle by its failure to support the cause it has openly and ambitiously taken up.

Next, referring to the relations between Chungking and Washington, Mr. Honda shows himself under no delusion. The hold of Britain and America, especially America, over Chungking, he says, is firm and unmovable. "Now that America has made clear," observes Mr. Honda, "that its policy is to see Chungking's resistance against Japan continued, Chiang Kai-shek has decided to maintain his double front against Japan and the Communists." Peace, therefore, with Japan would be impossible unless America so willed.

"Should Chungking make peace against the wish of America" opines Mr. Honda, "the retaliatory sanctions from America would be swift and severe." Such danger would never be hazarded. Impossible, says Mr. Honda, especially when America is freezing up foreign credits and Chiang Kai-shek, the Soong family, Dr. K. Kung hold billions of dollars deposited in American banks. These wealthy Chungking statesmen and their families placed themselves under the tyranny of America's dollar diplomacy when they converted their fortunes into American dollars.

Ocean Air Competition

The subsidy of $800,000 approved by a Senate Appropriations Committee to permit American Export Airlines to inaugurate a line from New York to Lisbon keeps open hopes of ending monopoly in transatlantic air service. Though only the first step in the effort to set up a competitive air service between the United States and Europe, the subsidy, if granted, would establish a much-needed balance.

The House of Representatives has so far rejected the plan for a second line, but the need for breaking the ocean air-traffic bottleneck is so great as to warrant reconsideration.

The total appropriation of $1,200,000 would supply two much-needed additional air schedules to Lisbon. Pan American Airways, the established company, would receive $416,000 for a fourth flight weekly while American Export, the newcomer, would receive the balance for a weekly service. The establishment of an additional airline had the approval of the State, War, Navy and Post Office Departments and the Civil Aeronautics Authority which considered it necessary in the light of high national policy.

It is already a matter of record that the transatlantic air service has become an important diplomatic arm. To it is entrusted so much important and urgent mail that at times the Clippers have been able to carry only two passengers. Recently it has become not so much a matter of selling plane seats as of determining who shall occupy them. Unless specially privileged, passengers might make better time by ship.

The great pioneer role that Pan American Airways has played in the development of transoceanic air services should not, however, go unnoticed. The company has conducted its operations virtually as a quasi-official arm of the United States Government. Its Latin-American service is a physical instrument of the "Good Neighbor" policy, while its transpacific service provides the American Navy with a necessary string of bases to the Orient.

All of this pioneering effort is preserved in the terms of the subsidy, which is a substitute for the original plan for a competing American transoceanic service. It provides that American Export's air service shall continue for only 60 days after the end of the European war. It may then make application for renewal, but may touch only at Lisbon and Mediterranean ports in Europe and Africa. Pan American Airways would gain under the plan the exclusive right to the northern route by way of Newfoundland and Eire after the war.

Plans to develop a second string to America's Atlantic air bow should be re-examined.—Christian Science Monitor.

AMERICA'S COMPOSERS INDEXED IN FILES FOR FUTURE REFERENCE

Extensive Compilation Includes Comprehensive Record Of U.S. Instrumental and Vocal Music

By HARRY L. HEWES

Christian Science Monitor

Preserved in more than 20,000 typed index cards, a record of some 7,300 compositions written by 2,258 native or resident American composers which have been given public performance since October, 1935, has been placed in the Library of Congress for its permanent reference files. The compilation is known as an index of American Composers, and, extensive as it is, it includes only formal music presented by the Federal Music Project and its successor, the WPA Music Program.

In recent years, when musicians in other parts of the Western World have been compelled to bend their creative talents to the dictates of the State, the people of the United States have enjoyed their widest experience in almost all of the fields of music enterprise. Audiences at governmentally sponsored programs have aggregated more than 178,000,000 listeners; and 101 symphonies, written by 83 American musicians, have been performed by movement or in entirety.

Inherent in this Index is a story of recognition of and exploration into the music written by Americans; and the moral relates that the American composer does exist and is writing music in his hour of history. Of the 2,258 individuals named in the Index, 1,297, or 55 per cent, are writing music today.

Vivid and Refreshing Music

"A new, organic and idiomatic music, reflecting the spirit and cadence of America, and informed by its legends, folk habits and history, is in the making," says Florence Kerr, Assistant Commissioner of Work Projects. "Musically we are coming into our own. We have found much music that is vivid, vital, and refreshing."

No effort has been made to include transient jazz, or swing, or current topical songs, in the compilation, although all programs will be observed for a possible study to be made later. Neither is there listed the primitive, indigenous, and vernacular music of the country as this is being assembled and annotated elsewhere. Where this music serves as derivative material in larger conventional forms, however, the source is credited, as in Arthur Shepherd's "Horizons," Ludwig Sedlaczek's "Fantasies on Kentucky Fiddle Tunes," and in compositions by Lamar Stringfield, Leo Sowerby, David Guion, Homer Grunn, Roy Harris, John Powell, George Allen Foster, Seth Bingham, Ferde Grofe, and Robert Sanders, among many.

Otherwise, the Index covers the historic span from Colonial days to the present, and it supplies students, program-makers, and musicologists with what has been described as the most comprehensive record of America's formal music in existence. It may be collected later into a permanent format. The compositions include symphonies, operas, operettas, ballets, and masques; concerti, symphonic, and tone poems; cantatas and other compositions for voices; a large literature for chamber and salon groups, quartets etc., suites, rhapsodies, descriptive pieces and marches for orchestras and bands, and an impressive folio of liturgical music.

Divided Into Four Sections

The Index is in four sections: (1) an alphabetical list of composers with notes and dates on performances, the performing units and conductors and soloists; (2) alphabetical list of compositions by form; (3) program notes, excerpts from reviews by recognized critics, and (4) "Americana," noting derivatives of folk tune, legend, or landscape, where these may be ascertained accurately. Biographical and program notes are not complete in some instances, but conductor or choral leader may find at hand an approximation of the merit of a new composition in the excerpts from reviews. After a single composition has been performed 20 times, no further program notation is made in the Index.

Among first performances were symphonies by Frederick Converse, of Boston; Wheeler Beckett, of Richmond; Felix Borowsky, Richard Czerwonky, and Leo Kopp, of Chicago; Robert S. Whitney, of Lousville; J. Vick O'Brien, of Pittsburgh; Vaughan Cahill, of Cleveland; Frederick Goodrich, of Portland, Ore.; Hans Heinrich Himmer, of Detroit; Theodore Bayne, of Grand Rapids; Glenroy C. Stein, of Dallas; Howard C. Christian, of Fort Worth; Nicholas Gualillo, of Syracuse; Richard Koebner, John Leight, and Kent Kennan, of Milwaukee; Willy Stahl and Emil Gerstenberger, of Los Angeles, and Arthur Gutman and William Schuman, of New York City.

Premieres of American operatic works included "Gettysburg," by Morris Hutchins Ruger, presented in Hollywood Bowl; "Romance of Robot," by Frederic Hart; "Barbecue Isle," by Homer Grunn; "Gay Grenadiers," by Vern Elliott; an operatic satire, "Fernando del Nonsentsico," by Felix Borowsky; "The Town Musicians of Bremen," by Clarence S. Metcalf, and two children's operas, "The Wolf and the Goats," and "Dulcimer Players," by Leon Lewin. Project musicians have presented excerpts from 60 operas or operettas by native or resident Americans. Out of more than 800 full-stage opera performances, all except about a dozen have been sung in English.

First performances of cantatas or other large-form choral works have included Seth Bingham's "Wilderness Stone," Ernst Bacon's "Ecclesiastes," Frederick Preston Search's "The Bridge Builders," and "Exaudi Deum," by A. Buckingham Simson.

Eagerness for Music

By March, 1936, the Federal Music Project, authorized during the preceding summer to rehabilitate, and to retrain and conserve the skills of professional musicians on the relief rolls, had entered regular schedules of performances in about 30 states. Already there was evidence of that eagerness for music that has brought millions to the project's concerts, and Nikolai Sokoloff, then the national director, ordered a study to discover what musical fare these new audiences were getting. A breakdown of one month's programs disclosed that about 200 "Americans" had been presented, many in repeated performances. A surprise developed in the unusual number of "first" performances of local composers, often unknown as musicians outside their own communities. A further study revealed that some of these compositions had authentic musical merit, and the study that grew into the Index of American Composers was started.

A "policy of encouragement" for the American composer had been adopted as an integral part of the national plan in the project's first days, and provided that any musician might present a score to the nearest project director with assurance that it would be given a reading. In some cities established musicians proffered their services to examine these manuscripts, and, where they had sufficient merit, there were rehearsal readings; after this, if conductor and director approved, the work was given public performance. This applied in general, of course, only to composers not yet established.

How to Amend or Rewrite

Hundreds of manuscripts were returned with suggestions as how to amend, or rewrite them, and often further study was counseled. There were instances, as Samuel L. Laciar, Philadelphia critic, remarked in the Evening Ledger, where the aspirations of these musicians outdistanced their technical equipment; too many attempted symphonies who had not bothered to master the intricacies of the fugue.

Prospects of a hearing stirred the imaginations of hundreds of aspiring musicians, young and old, who had known that a work by them, even if it caught a performance by one of the big subscription orchestras, might rest for years thereafter with no recognition other than that of the librarian's feather duster.

In line with this policy of encouragement for the American composers, and to increase the interest in and consciousness of American music, Dr. Sokoloff arranged for three-day nationwide festivals to be held in February and which would use all of the project's resources in programs to be devoted entirely to native music. These were held in 1938, 1939, and 1940. Special programs marked the 75th anniversary of the birth of Edward MacDowell, and memorial programs were suggested to present the music of Henry Hadley, George Gershwin, Arthur Foote, and Charles Martin Loeffler. As many as 10,000 project musicians participated in observances of National Music Week.

Another factor in bringing American music to the people rested in the vast new audiences. Here were no indoctrinated music patrons with fixed preferences, demanding the familiar classics, and so there were few box office hazards in giving them new music.

Admirable Service

Then there were the Composers' Forum Laboratories, extracurricular adjuncts of the project, which proved of admirable service to the music writers. The need for an experimental laboratory in which the composer might rescore, rewrite, or amend his work under conditions of complete instrumentation and audience reaction, had long been recognized. In October, 1935, the initial Composers' Forum Laboratory was held in New York City, and its first statement of policy declared that every type of "music written by competent musicians in America— music expressive of every shade of thought and feeling peculiar to this movement—will be observed. A panoramic view will be had of what is happening, in a musical way, about us."

Approximately 300 composers have presented more than 1,000 compositions before the Forum in New York, and the others, which using the program technique originated there, have been held in Boston, Philadelphia, Jacksonville, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Oklahoma City, Los Angeles, and at the University of Minnesota, and stenographic transcriptions were made in New York, Boston, and Detroit. These spot critical discussions between the composer, his colleagues, and the public have disclosed, as no more paper work ever could, such values and weaknesses as exist in the music.

Machines in Tropical Farming

In the tropics, agricultural production is in very special measure dependent on labor and its use. Proper soil and climatic conditions are generally to be found, but there is great scope for reforming working methods, even though there has hitherto been no systematic investigation of the best forms. Since many tropical districts are sparsely populated and since the efficiency of the worker is unfavorably effected by the tropical climate, it is indeed important to see in what way modern science and machinery can help out. As a part of the activities of the Colonial Economic Committee in Berlin these questions have been treated with scientific thoroughness for some time, and fundamentally important results and conclusions found.

Some of the hardest and slowest work, such as clearing of virgin land, can be considerably simplified and quickened up by technical aids. The trees are first felled by means of motor saws, and then the stumps removed by means of clearing machines. These clearing machines can even remove whole trees from the ground when they are not too large. For looking after one-year crops quickly the clearing machine is an indispensable prerequisite. Tractive machines and field implements must be specifically adapted to the special requirements of the tropics. The disc plow may well be used in the tropics, but the bearings of the disc wear out very quickly in most types of construction. This can easily be prevented when a more adaptable form is used.

With sowing machines—to give another example—care must be taken that the sowing share brings the seed properly into the soil in a dry as well as in a moist condition. In planting cotton, still other special requirements must be met because of the fuzziness of the seeds. Very important is the getting of suitable tractive machines in sufficient quantities. The examinations of the Colonial Economic Committee have indisputably shown that when certain measures are observed, oleiferous plants, such as soy beans, peanuts, sesame, palm oil, are excellently suited as fuel for Diesel motors. This means a very important forward step in the supply of the tropics with mechanical working power.

Encouragement of Water Science

In order to be able to solve the great water supply problems of the immediate future, a State School for Water and Cultivation Science has been opened in Munich where the necessary specialists will be trained. The course of study during the war comprises four years and a half, and in addition to general training includes courses on the following special subjects: green land economics, soil and plants, pond construction and fishery, soil improvement and land reclaiming, cultivating waste and moor land, bridge building, water supply, canalization, conservation of national resources and landscaping. The graduates of the new school will find employment in the higher and medium positions of technical service.

Believe It or Not, by Ripley

CARDS TRIM SOLONS IN 25-24 COMEDY

Ancient Mariners Best Pirates 6-5 in Second Yokohama Softball Tilt

The last place Cardinals beat the league-leading Solons 25 to 24 in an 11-inning slugfest, and the Ancient Mariners eked out a 6 to 5 victory over the Pirates in Sunday afternoon's mixed softball doubleheader at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club to make the championship race as close as it could possibly be. A large and enthusiastic crowd witnessed the two hard-fought contests which were played on the club grounds.

The outcome of Sunday's twin bill resulted in the Ancient Mariners gaining a tie for first place with the Solons while the Cardinals now share third place with the Pirates in the four-team league. The Ancient Mariners and the Solons have only a slim lead of one game over the other two squads, both having won two and lost one contest, while the Cardinals and Pirates have won one and lost two.

A softball critic would have called the Solons-Cardinals fracas a nightmare with the score more like the result of a basketball contest than a ball game, but it was close all the way, and the spectators had a world of fun out of the heavy hitting and also the numerous miscues. The Ancient Mariners-Pirates tilt was a decided contrast to the preceding contest, being a pitchers' duel all the way, and both hurlers got good support from their teammates.

Softball History Made

The first game, between the Solons and Cardinals, made softball history at the Y.C. and A.C., establishing some records that will probably not be broken for a long, long time. The scorekeeper had a hard enough time keeping a check of the runs as players on both sides whirled around the bases in rapid succession, but on compiling the statistics he was actually groggy.

The results should find no difficulty in gaining a prominent place in Ripley's "Believe It Or Not" column. There were 49 runs scored. There were 38 hits made, 20 by the Cardinals and 18 by the Solons. And as for errors, the winners made 14 and the losers 15, a grand total of 29 miscues! After adding up the figures, the scorekeeper made a beeline for the men's refreshments counter, muttering something to the effect that there are times when a man really needs a drink.

However, as the score indicates, the game was close, and the supporters of both sides had plenty to cheer about, as well as a lot to laugh over. As the score skyrocketed, first one team would be out in front and then the other. The lead changed hands five times, as well as being tied on as many occasions.

The Solons upheld their prestige as league leaders as soon as the contest got under way, piling up six runs on four hits and three errors, one of the bingles being a three-bagger by Niles Bond. At this stage it looked as if the game would run according to form, with the top rung team taking the cellar champs for a ride, but this state of affairs did not last long. The Cardinals came right back and made two points in the first and another four in the second to knot the count at six-all.

Lead Changes Hands

The Solons made three runs in the third to gain the advantage again, but the Cardinals followed suit in their half of the same stanza to tie the score at nine-all. The latter blanked their opponents in the fourth and scored twice to be out in front for the first time at 11 to 9. The Solons staged a five-run merry-go-round in the fifth to regain the lead, but the Cardinals followed suit in their half to forge ahead by 16 to 14.

The first place squad tied the score in the sixth by making two points and holding the opposition scoreless and staged a six-run rally in the seventh to gain a comfortable margin at 22 to 16. However, the Cardinals made three in their half of the seventh and another three in the eighth to knot the count again at 22-all. In the ninth the Solons made two runs, but the Cardinals would not be denied, and they evened the count in their half of the stanza to send the game into overtime. As it was, the latter almost won the game then and there, but the Solons tightened up and two Cardinals were left stranded on second and third.

To everyone's surprise there was no scoring in the tenth, the first inning in which neither side could get a point or more. The Solons were blanked again in the eleventh. After the first Cardinals batter was caught out, "Abie" Russell singled and then stole second and third. When Helen Lord grounded to the pitcher, Russell streaked for home, and what would have proved the winning run, but Devin's good throw to the catcher nipped the runner at the plate for the second out. Then Fred da Silva took the hero's role by poling out a three-bagger to bring in Helen Lord with the tally which gave the Cardinals their victory.

Russell Leads Batters

"Abie" Russell gained batting honors for the day by getting seven hits in eight times at bat. Ernie and Fred da Silva and Chris Fernandes all got three safeties for the Cardinals. Captain Ray Devin, Niles Bond and Gillie da Silva did most of the hitting for the Solons, each making three bingles.

In the nightcap the Pirates started off on the right foot, getting three runs in the initial canto. Living up to the southpaw tradition for wildness, "Lefty" Beatty walked the first batter, Vera Albeck. Bill Blamey got a hit, and both Pirates came in on "Bucky" Harriss's triple. Johnny da Silva singled to bring in Harriss before the side was retired.

The Ancient Mariners reduced their deficit to one run in their half of the same stanza. With one out, Beatty was safe on first when his fly to centerfield was dropped. He stole second and third and then scored on Joe da Costa's single. Betty Russell walked. Da Costa stole second and third. Herbie Schoene grounded to short, and while Mrs. Russell was being forced out at second on a fielder's choice, da Costa crossed the plate.

With both pitchers in rare form and getting good support from their teammates, neither side could score during the next four innings. Captain "Bucky" Harriss of the Pirates was winging them in so fast that Catcher George Gorman was asking if they didn't make special heavily padded mitts for softball backstops to use instead of ordinary gloves.

The Pirates were blanked again in the sixth, and the Ancient Mariners got three in their half of this stanza to gain the lead 5 to 3. Tessa Planas was safe at first on an outfield error. Beatty singled. Da Costa grounded to the shortstop and Miss Planas was forced out at third on a fielder's choice. Beatty and da Costa worked a double steal. Mrs. Russell grounded to the pitcher, and he first took a look at third to see what the runner there was doing. Noting the runner holding his base, the hurler made a fast throw to first to beat Mrs. Russell. The fair first-baseman (basewoman in this case) found the throw too hot to handle and dropped it. Beatty crossed the plate on the play, and while the pitcher and infielder were discussing whether or not the ball was thrown too hard, da Costa rounded third and streaked home for another run. One misogonist was heard to remark that this was just another case to prove that it never pays a man to argue with a woman.

The incident apparently put the hurler off his mettle, for he walked two of the next three batters, the second flying out to centerfield. Then Skipper "Hessy" Hesseltine of the Ancient Mariners sent the ball to second and Betty Russell came in on the play to put the seafarers two up. In the seven "Bucky" Harriss smacked out a two-bagger, stole third and scored on a fly to the outfield to cut the Pirates' deficit to one.

Errors Boost Score

In the eighth the Ancient Mariners got another two runs to boost their lead to 7-4. Da Costa got a single and stole second. Mrs. Russell was safe at first on fielder's choice, da Costa taking third. Schoene grounded out to second but da Costa scored. Percy Lord got to first on an error. Betty Russell rounded third and headed for home, but she was thrown out at the plate. Lord reached during the proceedings and came home on another miscue.

The Pirates almost tied up the game in the ninth. After the first batter had struck out, Ernest Eastlake reached first on an error. Harriss grounded to the thirdbaseman who made a fast fielder's choice throw to second. The ball was missed and it sailed into the outfield, both men on the bases scoring. Johnny da Silva got to first on a miscue and it looked as if the Ancient Mariners might blow up again in the ninth as they did last week. However, the next batter grounded out to the pitcher to end the game.

It was a heartbreaker for Captain "Bucky" Hariss to lose. He pitched a great game, allowing the opposition only three hits, all singles. He made two hits himself and scored three runs. In addition he had followed the training rules strictly to set the example for the rest of the Pirates and had watched them like a hawk to see that no fifth columnists got to work on his men. Primo Rau also gained her share of the laurels with a fine catch in the outfield.

Beatty allowed the Pirates five hits, two more than Harriss, but he got better support from his teammates than the opposing pitcher, especially from the two girls in the infield, Tessa Planas and Betty Russell, whose fielding was the envy of a lot of the men. They both pulled off some good catches and made assists in a sparkling manner.

Joe de Costa was the leading batter for the Ancient Mariners with two hits, while Bill Blamey, besides Harriss, got two hits for the Pirates.

Hard Day for Umps

George Edmondson had a hard day's work, umpiring both games.

The line-ups follows:

COLONIES IS QUESTION THAT WAR WILL DECIDE

Germany's Lack of Possessions Is One Aim of Present Struggle of Two Nations

D.N.B.

HAMBURG, May 12.—"Clearer than elsewhere, the tragedy of this battle of decison of the two great germanic nations faces us in the colonial question!" Reich Minister for Education, Wilhelm Rust, stated in a speech on German colonial work delivered in Hamburg.

"Clearer, too, than anywhere else the necessity of this struggle becomes evident in the colonial issue. This clearly may be seen by a glance at Germany's lack of colonies and at Britain's colonial possessions. Britain is fighting for the privilege of ruling over all resources of this world. Germany, on the other hand, is fighting a life and death struggle.

"The old Hanseatic slogan 'navigare necesse est' must be replaced by 'Germany must have colonies!' That which we will own tomorrow we have to prepare for already today. Thus already during this great decisive battle German science is occupying itself with colonial tasks employing its customary methodical way of research."

In this connection, Minister Rust stated that 166 universities were occupying themselves with Africa and African problems, while 26 colonial working groups had been formed at these universities. The main task was to provide the young university students with the possibility to acquaint themselves with future colonial tasks. Students who had chosen colonial agriculture and forestry as their branch of study were given the opportunity of two semesters of practical training after having completed their academic courses. The universities at Hamburg and Goettingen were training farmers with the diploma for service in the colonies. In view of Hamburg's importance as world trade center the Reich Forest Master had decided to transfer his research institute for colonial and foreign forestry to Hamburg.

IZUMO SHRINE FETE WILL BEGIN TODAY

Historical Place Associated With Okuninushi-no-Mikoto, Nephew of Sun Goddess

The Izumo Grand Shrine at Kitsuki, Taisha-machi, Shimane Prefecture, will hold its annual festival for three days starting today in honor of the spirit of Okuninushi-no-Mikoto, the wise Ruler of the so-called Izumo tribe, who in ancient days were settling in province, now known as the San-in district facing Chosen and the Japan Sea. The shrine is second to the Ise Grand Shrines in its importance. The Izumo tribe involved people having a very excellent culture and played an important role in developing this land for many years before the so-called Hyuga tribe came to Kyushu.

One of the features at this shrine is that no special message is read before the sanctuary to honor the spirit of Okuninushi-no-Mikoto, the object of worship, except offering a silent prayer to the deity. The first day of the festival will be marked with yabusame, a classic sport event, mounted archers shooting the mark while their horses are galloping.

First Japanese Shrine

The Grand Shrine of Izumo is noted as the first shrine institution in Japan. As such, it is associated with any interesting myths and traditions, which are traced to the prehistoric age, known as kamiyo, or divine age. According to this tradition, Susano-no-Mikoto greatly offended his elder sister Amaterasu-o-mikami, or the Sun Goddess, until he was driven out of the divine abode, known as Takamaga-hara, by lesser gods and goddesses. Japanese scholars have been unable so far to determine what part of the country was call by the name of Takamagahara, but they believe that Susano-no-Mikoto first sought refuge in Chosen and then returned to Izumo, northwestern coast of the main island.

In the course of his wandering, the story goes on, he met an old man and his wife, who were weeping because their seven daughters were devoured by an eight-headed monster serpent and the eighth one was soon to be thus taken away from them. Susano-no-Mikoto took pity on them and assured them that he would deliver their daughter from such a misfortune by killing the serpent. He ordered the couple to set out eight jars filled with wine to the place where the serpent might come and drink the wine.
